Vowing Tax Relief, Asserts Carter Hits at Middle-Income Class

By JAMES M. NAUGHTON

Special to The New York Times
G. Pa., Sept. 20—President Jimmy Carter today vowed to increase Federal tax relief for middle-income families at a time he said would be going in the opposite direction.

Special to The New York Times

relief because it is good for America," he said to applause.

Without naming Mr. Carter, the President nonetheless joined personally in a White House effort to portray the Democratic nominee's tax revision proposals as burdensome to half of the nation's taxpayers.

Meanwhile, Senator Walter F. Mondale, the Democratic running mate, charged that the Republicans favor the wealthy on tax issues. Page 26.

Without mentioning a statement yesterday in which Mr. Carter pledged that he would "never increase taxes for the working people of our country and the lower and middle-income groups," Mr. Ford alluded to remarks the Georgian was reported to have made in an interview published over the weekend.

Those who advocate additional expenditures have now suggested," Mr. Ford said, "that in order to pay for these new programs and added expenditures, there should be an additional tax levy on the middle-income people, which is approximately 50 percent of the taxpayers in this country."

"We should go in the opposite direction," he continued. "We should give them tax relief, not additional taxes."

HIRSCHFELD THROWS SUPPORT TO BUCKLEY

But Javits Declines to Campaign for His Fellow Republican

By MAURICE CARROLL

In the lobby of a Manhattan public school yesterday, Abraham Hirschfeld, who ran fifth in the five-candidate race for the Democratic nomination for United States Senator from New York, endorsed James L. Buckley for the job.

But as Mr. Buckley, the Conservative-Republican incumbent, gained a Democratic, he lost a Republican. He had refused to endorse his fellow Senator, Jacob K. Javits, who won re-election two years ago as a Republican-Liberal and Mr. Javits returned the favor yesterday by saying he would not support Mr. Buckley.

The Hirschfeld announcement was unexpected. Mr. Buckley, a strained expression on his face, stood to the side in the school lobby on East 88th Street as the voluble Mr. Hirschfeld repeated charges—which had been denied previously—that the Democratic nominee, Daniel P. Moynihan, had not voted for 16 years in New York State.

A Surprise News Conference
"All I'm saying is what the record shows," Mr. Hirschfeld said, wagging duplicated copies of voting records at the cameras. "If he has other records to prove, I'll withdraw it."

Mr. Hirschfeld, a wealthy builder of parking garages, had donated a mural of Robert F. Kennedy to the school, which is named for the Senator. He asked the principal, Dennis Hayes, if he could use the lobby for a news conference yesterday, but had not said that the purpose was political, Mr. Hayes said.

"I didn't realize it would be political until I saw the Senator," Mr. Hayes said.

California Snubs Alaska Oil, Forcing U.S. to Reconsider

By EDWARD COWAN

Special to The New York Times
SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Unexpected opposition by the State of California to the delivery by tankers of Alaskan oil to a terminal near Los Angeles has forced Washington to reconsider basic assumptions concerning the long-awaited Alaska pipeline.

Environmental issues and also economic fundamentals, such as a projected West Coast oil surplus, have led Washington to consider whether United States oil from Alaska's Prudhoe Bay should be sent to Japan, rather than to California, or perhaps shipped via a permanent supply route through the Panama Canal to American refineries on the Gulf of Mexico and the East Coast.

California's position has stunned Washington inasmuch as there was no hint of it in the long bitter debate that preceded approval by Congress three years ago of the Alaska pipeline, a project the Government has counted on to diminish American dependence on foreign oil.

The issue concerns the so-called West Coast "surplus," that fraction of the North Slope oil, now apparently more than half, that could not be used by West Coast refineries.

The Standard Oil Company (Ohio), which has the largest single interest in Prudhoe Bay's proven reserves of 9.6 billion barrels, wants to unload the oil at Long Beach, Calif., for pipeline relay to Texas and then onto refineries on the Gulf Coast and in the Middle West.

The Federal Energy Administration, although officially uncommitted, leans toward the Sohio proposal. California, however, contends that unloading 1.2 million barrels a day in 1977 and up to 1.6 million by 1980 could add hydrocarbons to the already dirty air of southern California.

Meanwhile, the unfolding Federal-state dispute over oil and the environment has taken on partisan overtones. Associates of Governor Edmund G. Brown Jr., a prominent Democrat who vied for his party's Presidential nomination earlier this year, have said Washington sees the problem too much through Sohio's lens.

Correction Monitor Assails Probation And Parole System

By FRED FERRETTI

The chairman of the New York State Commission of Correction, Stephen J. Chinlund, yesterday called the state's parole system "a shambles" and "probation more of a sham than parole." He said he was in favor of "scrapping the whole thing and starting over" because these programs did not stem recidivism.

He was slightly less pessimistic about the state corrections system as a whole, calling it "about average" in comparison with systems in other states. He said, however, that its quality had risen slightly since "the days under Rockefeller when it was down to being near the worst."

Yet Mr. Chinlund, in an interview with editors and reporters of The New York Times, saw some hope for the system in new prisoner-guard volunteer counseling programs, which reflected what he called "a reservoir of good will within the system that is rarely perceived by those outside."

Another Glimmer of Hope
Another glimmer of hope was seen by Mr. Chinlund in his appointment yesterday of Carol S. Whelan, a staff associate of the Community Service Society's Committee on Youth and Correction, to head a new New York City office of the Commission of Correction.

Mrs. Whelan will be in charge of the investigative function that the state exercises over the city's prisons. "It's evident that now is a very good time for change in the system," she said. "It's breaking down, both parole and probation, and because of the financial stresses everybody is aware that change is needed and that something has to be done. I want to be

FELONY ARRESTS RISE 6% IN NEW YORK CITY

Increase Noted in First Half of '76 Despite Cut in Police Force

By SELWYN RABER

Arrests in New York City for felonies—the most serious crimes—increased by almost 6 percent in the first half of the year despite cuts in police manpower, according to Police Department statistics.

Arrests for less serious crimes, such as misdemeanors, declined, and the reduced police force handed out 71,000 fewer traffic tickets.

The trends indicated that the police, having undergone personnel cuts of 5,000 officers and faced with a rising crime rate, now were concentrating more on major crimes and paying less attention to problems such as disorderly conduct and traffic control.

James M. Taylor, the first deputy police commissioner, said the statistics were "an encouraging sign that the men are working harder." Commissioner Taylor denied that there had been any directive to ignore petty crimes, but he added:

"If an officer is going to have to be in court, he should be there on major cases. That has always been our first priority."

Another high official, who asked for anonymity, said that supervisory officers, such as sergeants, were generally

RHODESIAN AFFIRMS MEETING PRODUCED 'CONCRETE RESULTS'

NOTES 'CHANCE OF SETTLEMENT'

But Smith, on Return From Talks With Kissinger, Indicates He Must Win His Party's Support

By MICHAEL T. KAUFMAN

Special to The New York Times
SALISBURY, Rhodesia, Sept. 20—Prime Minister Ian D. Smith said today that "concrete results" had emerged from his talks yesterday with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and that he felt there was now "a chance of a settlement."

In a short radio interview, the 56-year-old Prime Minister disclosed no specifics of what had been discussed in Pretoria but termed the Kissinger initiative "a diplomatic breakthrough."

"I don't think there is any doubt as far as the concrete results are concerned," Mr. Smith said. "We did start by asking one another questions and trying to clarify the positions but clearly towards the end there was a bit of bargaining, negotiating. Some pretty tough negotiating took place and as a result we came to a point where we were satisfied as to what the intention was and I have been presented with that situation."

'Certain Procedures' Necessary
Asked about the significance of the talks and the prospect for an early resolution of the 11-year Rhodesian impasse, Mr. Smith replied, "It does mean that there is a chance of a settlement." However, he told the interviewer, "As you are aware I have got to go through certain procedures."

This was taken to mean that Mr. Smith had to sell the proposals to his party and Cabinet. He conferred with key Cabinet officials today and is to meet with the full Cabinet tomorrow and with a caucus of his Rhodesian Front party on Thursday. It has been suggested that he will address the nation on Friday.

The economy of landlocked Rhodesia has survived and even prospered during the years that the country's trade with the outside world has been held illegal in international forums, largely because of arduous and intricate methods of defeating the sanctions. These methods, relied heavily on continued access to South African rail and port facilities; access that in recent months has been felt to be in jeopardy.

Difficulties in Meeting Noted
In the interview Mr. Smith acknowledged that because of the international view of his government as illegal, it had been difficult for Mr. Kissinger to see him, something he said the Secretary of State had noted in their talks.

"However, he said in the end he believed that people in the position such as he enjoys had to take certain chances," Mr. Smith said, "and he assured us that what he was dedicated to doing was trying to prevent war, or stop war or fighting wherever this existed and bring about peace."

Mr. Smith continued that despite the pressures that had been brought to keep Mr. Kissinger from meeting him, the discussion did take place.

"So maybe it was a diplomatic breakthrough," Mr. Smith declared. "The main thing is it succeeded."

Palme's Resignation Is Accepted; Decisive Defeat Impresses Swedes

Special to The New York Times

STOCKHOLM, Sept. 20—Prime Minister Olof Palme's Social Democratic Cabinet resigned tonight after a decisive general-election defeat that ended more than four decades of his party's rule in Sweden.

Mr. Palme, in a letter of resignation delivered to the Speaker of Parliament, Henry Allard, said: "I hereby request to be dismissed from the position as Prime Minister."

Mr. Allard, accepting the resignation, asked the outgoing Cabinet to remain as a caretaker administration "until a new Government has taken office." The probable new Prime Minister, 50-year-old Thorbjorn Falldin, the leader of the Center Party, is due to take over after Parliament reassembles on Oct. 4.

Because it was the first time in 44 years that a non-Socialist coalition had attained power in Sweden, the bureaucracy and government machinery seemed jolted by the defeat of the Social Democrats.

Unofficial results gave the non-Socialist bloc 130 seats in Parliament against 169 for the Social Democrats and the Communists, who are unofficial partners in Parliament with Mr. Palme's party. The non-Socialist bloc includes the Center, Liberal and Moderate, or Conservative, Parties.

Mr. Palme, who took office in 1969 and is the longest serving Prime Minister in Western Europe, said this morning: "It's going to be a tough road ahead."

Brezhnev, head of the Soviet Communist Party, receives W. Averell Harriman at his office in the Kremlin.

Harriman Briefs Brezhnev on U.S. Election Campaign

By DAVID K. SHIPLEY

Special to The New York Times
G. Pa., Sept. 20—W. Averell Harriman, serving as a foreign policy adviser to President Jimmy Carter, met for nearly an hour today with Leonid I. Brezhnev, Soviet leader, in an effort to allay anxieties about the impact of a speech-making on détente.

new agreement limiting strategic nuclear arms. The Soviet leader blamed the United States for this failure, Mr. Harriman reported.

"A lot of time was spent on my explaining to him what an American campaign was all about and what the candidates were thinking about," the 84-year-old diplomat declared. He indicated that he had described the candidates as concentrating on the voters as their audience, not on foreign governments. The message to Mr. Brezhnev, apparently, was that statements made in the heat of a campaign did not automatically become policy.

"It's awfully hard to understand the workings of an American campaign," Mr. Harriman observed. "But I think I did some good. I think he was somewhat relieved by what I had to say. I'm sure he wasn't totally satisfied. I'm not sure I was able to persuade him that everything that was said was of no importance."

Mr. Harriman, a Democrat who has

2 Die, 10 Lost as British Warships Collide 80 Miles Off Dutch Coast

LONDON, Sept. 20 (AP)—Two British warships collided in the North Sea today and one capsized, killing two crewmen, the Defense Ministry announced. Ten men were listed as missing.

The announcement said 32 of the 44 crewmen on board the capsized ship, the minesweeper Fittleton, were picked up by the other vessel involved in the collision—the frigate Mermaid—and a flotilla of rescue craft. The collision occurred 80 miles off the coast of the Netherlands. Both ships had taken part in North Atlantic Treaty Organization exercises.

The Ministry said both Mermaid and Fittleton had completed their roles in the maneuvers and at the time of the collision were on their way for a goodwill visit to Hamburg, West Germany.

The Ministry said the 360-ton Fittleton was still afloat in the North Sea at nightfall with rescue vessels searching for survivors. A Ministry spokesman said Royal Navy divers were trying to determine if any men were trapped in the wooden hull of the capsized vessel.

The Fittleton's 44 crew members were reservists known as "weekend sailors." They get the name because they sign up for five years of weekend training plus three cruises a year.

A navy spokesman said damage to the 2,630-ton Mermaid, the flagship of Rear Adm. Hugo Hollins, the commander of reserve forces, was only superficial. The ship has a crew of 180.

The Ministry gave no cause for the collision. A spokesman said winds were light at the scene of the crash and seas were calm, but there were patches of fog in the vicinity.

Taking part in the rescue, he said, were two West German destroyers, Bayern and Hessen, and six Royal Navy minesweepers, German and Dutch patrol planes and British helicopters were also involved. The British frigate Achilles was on its way to the scene.

The Fittleton sailed Sept. 10 to join the naval exercise, involving thousands of men, hundreds of ships and planes from Atlantic alliance countries. The exercise has been going on for more than a week in the Atlantic Ocean, English Channel and North Sea.

The frigate Mermaid was in collision just six months ago with the Icelandic gunboat Thor during the dispute over fishing rights between the two countries. Both sides accused the other of deliberately ramming their vessels.

Two British warships collided in North Sea (1) after having taken part in NATO maneuvers now under way off central Norway (2).

Thousands in NATO Exercise
TRONDHEIM, Norway, Sept. 20 (Reuters)—Thousands of British, American and Dutch marines stormed ashore in central Norway from an American helicopter carrier today as the North Atlantic alliance staged a show of strength on its isolated northern flank.

Watched by King Olav V, about 7,500 marines, supported by tanks and aircraft, assaulted five beaches about 125 miles northeast of here.

In the fjord and off the coast, meanwhile, dozens of allied warships maneuvered. Some 275 warships, 900 aircraft and 80,000 men are taking part in the maneuvers, which began 10 days ago.

Chinese Province Chiefs Back Home

HONG KONG, Sept. 20—Most of China's provincial leaders have returned to their home areas after a brief visit to Peking last week, broadcasts and news reports from China show, suggesting that a meeting of the Communist Party's Central Committee to elect a new leadership is not imminent.

At the same time, there was an apparent further indication of the growing importance of Prime Minister Hua Kuo-feng, who delivered the eulogy for Chairman Mao Tse-tung at a mass memorial rally on Saturday.

According to Hsinhua, the Chinese press agency, Mr. Hua has sent a message to North Korea's President, Kim Il Sung, expressing "deep condolences" on the death today of Vice President Choi Yong Kun.

In the past such messages were often signed by more than one Chinese leader, including Chairman Mao, Prime Minister Chou En-lai and Chu Teh, the head of the National People's Congress, China's equivalent of the head of state. All three men have died in the past year.

There was no further word on what happened to the body of Mao Tse-tung. His remains were last seen on Friday in a large glass coffin in the Great Hall of the People in Peking. Most Chinese leaders in the past have been cremated, but there has been speculation that Mao's body may be embalmed and preserved for display as the Russians did with Lenin and the Vietnamese with Ho Chi Minh.

Virtually all the provincial leaders who are members of the Central Committee went to Peking immediately after Mao's death. It was the biggest gathering of party leaders since the last party congress, in 1973, and it touched off speculation that a Central Committee session might be held to fill vacant posts.

But a list of leaders who attended the memorial rally in the capital on Saturday showed that the provincial officials had almost all left Peking. The list was published yesterday by Hsinhua, the Chinese press agency. Apparently they returned to their provincial posts to take charge

Johannesburg News and Notes: Vorster Is Hopeful Over Rho

By JOHN F. BURNS
Special to The New York Times

JOHANNESBURG, Sept. 20—Prime Minister John Vorster said today that the proposals put to Prime Minister Ian D. Smith of Rhodesia by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger had laid the basis for a solution to the Rhodesian crisis, which formed the major topic at weekend talks between the three men in Pretoria.

"I am prepared to say that if both sides in the Rhodesia dispute work together in good faith on the basis of the proposals put forward, it can lead to a solution of the Rhodesian problem," the Prime Minister told the South African Press Association.

Mr. Vorster, making his first public announcement on the talks, denied that South Africa had put pressure on Rhodesia, which relies on South Africa for its supplies, to accede to the Kissinger plan. He added: "I am not aware that any pressure was likewise put on Mr. Smith and his colleagues by Mr. Kissinger."

Mr. Vorster, who has hailed his talks with Mr. Kissinger as the end of South Africa's diplomatic isolation from the West, saw to it that no effort was spared to impress the Americans. Mr. Kissinger ruled out any activities other than discussions, but the arrangements made for him and his party were elaborate and expensive.

On arrival at the Waterkloof Air Base near Pretoria, there was no honor guard, since it was not an official visit. But driving out of the base, the Secretary of State passed what military public relations officials described as a "quarter guard" of black soldiers carrying automatic rifles, members of one of the first black units in the South African Defense Force to be trained for a combat role.

The military spokesman said that it was standard for the entries to the base to be guarded by soldiers, and the fact that the soldiers were black was said to be coincidence and not a special move for Mr. Kissinger's benefit.

Security was elaborate, but not noticeably more so than in many countries that Mr. Kissinger has visited that have less serious civil disorders. Although the black townships around Pretoria have been the scene of major disorders in recent months, with at least 20 people killed, there was no visible attempt to keep blacks out of the area of the Burgerspark Hotel, where Mr. Kissinger stayed. Most of the service staff in the hotel are black.

Gen. Michael O. Geldenhuys, chief of the security police and a former bodyguard for Mr. Vorster, took personal charge of the security detail assigned to Mr. Kissinger. A burly, sandy-haired man, he was constantly at the head of a wedge of security men, American and South African, who surrounded the Secretary whenever he passed through the hotel lobby or emerged from the discussions to brief the press.

The general has become a household name in another context here in recent months. His favor, acting under special laws that exempt it from scrutiny or review by Parliament or the courts, has detained more than 850 people without trial, since the black upheaval began three months ago. The detentions, mostly of blacks, have been bitterly criticized by opponents of apartheid, who see them as an attempt to eliminate all black leaders who do not cooperate with the Government.

One of the most difficult tasks facing the United States Embassy here was the choice of black leaders invited to meet Mr. Kissinger on Saturday. The list appeared to have been limited to leaders considered legitimate by the Government. Most of the nine blacks who participated, while critical of apartheid, function within Government-created institutions. An exception was Percy Qoboza, editor of The World, a newspaper for blacks.

In an editorial the day Mr. Kissinger arrived, Mr. Qoboza warned that Mr. Kissinger would confirm young blacks' suspicions that the United States was siding with South Africa unless he insisted on meeting leaders able to the Government.

"If he insists on talking to leaders who operate out of the urban areas, he will have given credit efforts," he wrote.

For Mr. Smith, the opportunity to negotiate a settlement of the Rhodesian problem was the United States Ambassador Vorster, where he met for nearly eight hours, workable than the Royal in which he met twice more, and the railroad ca above the Victoria Falls met last year with his nationalist adversaries.

Although Mr. Smith talks as the most important, he appeared unusual his Air Rhodesia Visc here; he waded with journalists on the out Africa's rugby match v land, which he attended burg on Saturday. Mr. South Africa, and won sions of talks with Mr. K he was officially said to the proposals the Secret him, he was sleeping, a of his diplomatic repre siding with South Africa unless he in-

GER REPORTS AMBIBIAN LEADER

Declines to Say Whether of Talks With Smith Acceptable to Blacks

BY ERNARD GWERTZMAN
Special to The New York Times
Zambia, Sept. 20—President Kaunda received a personal message from Secretary of State Alexander Haig yesterday. Mr. Haig declined to say whether the talks with Ian Smith, the white-minority leader, head of one of the states dedicated to the white minority regime did not seem unhappy with the message. But in his report to the press, Mr. Haig said he appeared to be saying anything until he was asked by other black African leaders what happens in Rhodesia.

dealing with a situation in any leaders are involved in one man to make a unilateral decision. Mr. Kaunda said, "We were by the American Government. I think we have to take the decision jointly."

Described as Useful
Mr. Kaunda, regarded by Washington as the leader, had just held the sessions with Mr. Kissinger and with reporters on his terms to say more than that the talks were "useful" and that Mr. Kissinger's mission should be continued.

Mr. Haig, who last night said in a speech he expected Mr. Smith to transfer power over a two-year period to the black majority, said he was early this afternoon that at considerable progress has been made toward black majority rule and in South-West Africa, Namibia.

Mr. Haig's flight from Pretoria to Lusaka, where he gave few fresh details, was reported by Mr. Kissinger and his aides on the flight. Mr. Kissinger is reported to take on faith that Mr. Kissinger's mission to make "facts" that would inevitably lead to the inference of black and white and Britain and perhaps other nations a new constitution allowing rights to the black majority. Mr. Haig, however, that party leadership in Rhodesia is whatever he and his colleagues in Pretoria, but reported that while Mr. Smith had the past in negotiations with the white-minority government was unlikely to do so now the involvement of Prime Minister Vorster of South Africa.

Fears Spread of Conflict
Mr. Vorster, who himself heads a white-minority government, has joined with Mr. Haig in bringing about a negotiated settlement of the continued conflict that has spilled over into his country. In South-West Africa, American officials reported that Mr. Vorster had made a key obstacle to the independence of that territory, which South Africa administered since 1920.

Mr. Vorster was apparently ready to withdraw from South-West Africa, but the nationalist group recognized Africa, take part in the talks now going on in Windhoek, of South-West Africa, but that the involvement of this was likely behind the meeting resumes on believe that the only chance of settlement is having one black leader, or, more or less appointed leaders of the black African community, whose earlier talks with Mr. Haig ended in failure, has Soviet support would be acceptable to the whites. More important, he is reported to be a man of greater stature than the other nationalist figures. Only reservation is whether he has significant backing among the six million blacks.

Who see Mr. Nkomo as the only negotiator argue that his prestige would increase as his negotiations succeed. They also feel that Mr. Nkomo's position in the discussion would be strengthened if Mr. Nkomo would bring inside the country, away from the 6,000 black soldiers of Rhodesian forces, to protect possible breakaway guerrillas that would challenge his authority.

Though his control of those black troops led by white officers, Mr. Nkomo would have leverage over Mr. Haig in bargaining for assurances of a transition and guarantees of rights.

SYRIA CHARGES SADAT BALKS BEIRUT PEACE

Him Responsible for Failure of
New Effort for Resolution

By JAMES F. CLARITY
Special to The New York Times

DAMASCUS, Syria, Sept. 20—Syria charged today that President Anwar el-Sadat of Egypt was personally responsible for the failure of new efforts toward a cease-fire and settlement of the crisis in Lebanon.

The Syrian attack, in an editorial in Al Baath, the publication of the ruling Baath Party, headed by President Hafez al-Assad, was one of the sharpest attacks on Mr. Sadat issued in Damascus in recent weeks since this country and Egypt agreed formally in June to stop castigating each other in public.

Mr. Sadat, the editorial, bore the responsibility for the collapse of talks last Friday and yesterday at Chitaura, Lebanon, where the crisis was discussed by Elias Sarkis, the Lebanese President-elect, Yasir Arafat of the Palestine Liberation Organization and Vice Air Marshal Najj Jamil President Assad's confidant and Deputy Defense Minister, and Hassan Sabri el-Kholy, the Arab League's mediator.

New Syrian Drive Hinted

Sources close to Marshal Jamil said that the collapse of the Chitaura parley increased the likelihood of additional Syrian military action in Lebanon. There was some suggestion in military circles here that any new Syrian drive to dislodge Palestinian and leftist Moslem forces from the mountains east of Beirut might start before the December snows.

New talks are tentatively set for Friday in Beirut among the parties that failed to reach a settlement at Chitaura. Some officials in Damascus have suggested that Syria might refuse to attend, but this could not be confirmed tonight.

The Al Baath editorial said that the Egyptian President did not want a settlement in Lebanon and was doing all he could to block one. It implied that Mr. Sadat had worked against a settlement over the last week as various Lebanese and Palestinian leaders went to Cairo to discuss the crisis with him.

Continuation or increasing of the fighting, it continued, would achieve for Mr. Sadat a number of major goals—among them realization of the next step of the Sinai disengagement agreement with Israel, signed a year ago.

Fighting Flares in Lebanon

Special to The New York Times

BEIRUT, Lebanon, Sept. 20—Palestinian, Syrian and rival Lebanese forces stepped up military operations today following the failure yesterday of cease-fire talks among their political leaders.

Syrian artillery and tanks, about 12 miles east of here on the Beirut-Damascus highway near Sofar, shelled Palestinian and Lebanese Moslem positions in the mountains area of Ain Tura.

The attack came less than hours after the end of the meeting attended by President-elect Elias Sarkis of Lebanon, Yasir Arafat, the head of the Palestine Liberation Organization, and Vice Air Marshal Najj Jamil, the Syrian Deputy Defense Minister.

The Palestinian and leftist Moslem positions in the mountains north of Sofar represent a key issue in the cease-fire talks. Mr. Arafat rejected out of hand a demand by the Syrians and by Mr. Sarkis that those forces be withdrawn. He demanded a Syrian withdrawal from Sofar instead.

In another military action, artillery manned by rightist Christians reportedly shelled the area around Aleh, a leftist Moslem stronghold in the mountains west of Sofar.

South Africa Cited For Harsh Methods In Curbing Unrest

Special to The New York Times

JOHANNESBURG, Sept. 20—The Christian Institute of Southern Africa suggested in a report made public tonight that moves by the Government since the outbreak of unrest in the black community three months ago had taken the country a significant step further toward becoming a police state.

"The facts presented in this report tend to justify rather than mitigate the serious question of whether South Africa is now perhaps an 'incomplete' police state, if in fact not a police state in the full sense of the word," the 42-page report said, introducing a compilation of statistics on political detentions and trials.

The Government has in the past vigorously rejected such charges, pointing to the existence of a parliamentary opposition, a stridently critical press and an independent judiciary. Justice Minister James T. Kruger said recently that in no other country was as much care taken to respect fundamental liberties.

The Christian Institute, a multiracial organization that is outspoken in its criticism of the Government's racial policies, has itself been the target of legal moves by the Government. Its director, the Rev. Beyers Naudé, is appealing a conviction for refusing to testify before a parliamentary commission set up to inquire into allegations of subversive activities by four organizations, including the institute. He was sentenced to a $57 fine or a month in jail.

At 2 A.M. last Thursday, the security police arrested the institute's regional director in the Transvaal, the Rev. Mashwabada Mayatula, and his daughter Victoria. Both were subsequently released without being charged.

The report, entitled "South Africa—A Police State?", lists 315 people known to be detained under the security laws, which provide for little or no review by Parliament, the courts, or the public. All but a handful of those detained are non-white, the great majority having been rounded up since the disorders in the black townships erupted on June 16.

The report suggested, however, that the arrests had not had an intimidating effect on blacks. "Feelings amongst blacks have developed to such a point that the vast majority view it in the opposite light, regarding detention of persons involved in the current crisis as an honor bestowed upon them for their participation in the struggle for liberation," it said.

'S SOCIALISTS SWEDISH LOSS

man Swing to Right Is —Schmidt Rival Sees in Palme's Defeat

1 to The New York Times
20—In West Germany and Europe today the biggest question appeared to be whether Prime Minister Olof Palme's election in Sweden meant a swing to the right in the elections of Oct. 3. If that happens, it could topple Helmut Schmidt, the Social Democrat who has led the German Government since 1974.

Schmidt's opponent, the Christian Democrat, Helmut Kohl, running neck in neck with Mr. Schmidt, according to a poll, welcomed the defeat of Mr. Palme. "A signal for Europe not to turn the continent over to the Socialists," he said.

Aides Doubt a Replay
Mr. Schmidt's campaign aides were not disheartened. One official about a repetition here, said, "Sweden is a country where the best is for its nudism, not for its Socialists."

Officials of the opposition party took the results in a "very encouraging" though the government of Prime Minister Palme does not have to call an election before 1979.

Schmidt Tough Fight
before the Swedish election, Schmidt said in Düsseldorf that whatever the result, it would be only a "minimal" effect on the German campaign. "If the Socialists had won in Italy last June, it would have been much more to my party."

Mr. Dobrynin said, "defending myself of explaining," he stressed, as he recounted the conversation with Mr. Carter, the Democratic candidate as a nuclear engineer, his commitment to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons and the adoption of the concept of limited nuclear war.

of the Social Democrats seemed to stum and bewilder civil servants, businessmen, journalists and office workers. About 60 percent of the eight million Swedes have lived only under Social Democratic Governments, and the party has shaped one of the most elaborate social-welfare states in the world.

Offices at a Standstill

Government offices were at a virtual standstill. "Whichever office I go to, I see secretaries crying," said a Labor Ministry official. Appointments with civil servants in the Finance and Education Ministries were abruptly canceled today, and numerous workers were plainly worried about their jobs.

"Finally, finally, finally," said an editorial in the Expressen, a Liberal Party newspaper. "One-party domination has been broken. The victor is Swedish democracy."

The Social Democratic afternoon newspaper, Aftonbladet, indicated that the voters believed the party had become flabby and smug. "The party has come to be seen as an instrument of bureaucracy," the newspaper said. "This image has undoubtedly frightened off many young voters."

Under the new Government, ties with the United States are expected to improve. American relations with Sweden plunged in December, 1972, when Mr. Palme compared the bombings of North Vietnam to Nazi massacres. The United States asked Sweden not to send a new ambassador to Washington, and the State Department ordered the acting American Ambassador to Stockholm, J. C. Guthrie, who was on vacation, not to return to Sweden. The unusually strong diplomatic move reportedly stung Mr. Palme.

It took more than a year before President Nixon appointed an Ambassador, Robert Strause-Hupe, who now is Ambassador to NATO.

Politicians and the Swedish press were unanimous in attributing the Social Democrats' defeat to Mr. Falldin's strenuous campaign against Government plans to make Sweden the world's biggest per capita consumer of nuclear energy. Mr. Falldin said the plan to build 13 nuclear reactors by 1985 was dangerous and wasteful.

Appealed to the Young

Analysis in the Social Democratic Party said Mr. Falldin's campaign appealed especially to the 480,000 young voters casting ballots for the first time since the minimum voting age was lowered from 20 to 18.

Another key issue, pressed by the Liberal and Moderate Parties, was a proposal for the introduction of employee investment funds. The plan called for companies to convert 20 percent of their profits into company shares and place them in worker funds, enabling unions eventually to control a large section of Swedish industry. The plan was supported by the Swedish Trade Union Confederation, which is closely linked to the Social Democrats.

The opposition insisted, and voters apparently agreed, that it was a radical measure that would overstrengthen the powers of trade unions and alter the relatively peaceful and profitable relationship between unions and employers.

Perhaps the central issue that defeated the Social Democrats, however, was the longevity of the party's rule, and a feeling that the bureaucracy had become insensitive.

U.S. Pleased With Result

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20 (AP)—Some United States officials expressed quiet satisfaction today over the defeat of Prime Minister Palme. Although relations have improved steadily over the last two years, Mr. Palme was never popular with some American officials.

His Government irritated Washington by its support of the Palestine Liberation Organization in the United Nations and in its identification with revolutionary movements in third-world countries.

Victor Over Swedish Socialists

Thorbjorn Falldin

By BERNARD WEINRAUB
Special to The New York Times

STOCKHOLM, Sept. 20—His hands are gnarled and blistered, his suits baggy, he speaks in a murmur, gripping a pipe and slouching restlessly in a chair. In the midst of a noisy news conference he seems a curiously brooding politician. Even this morning, in the aftermath of a stunning triumph over the Social Democratic Party, Thorbjorn Falldin spoke solemnly and nervously, biting his lip and perspiring heavily as he answered questions about the formation of a new government in Sweden—the first non-Socialist government in 44 years.

"Now we are going to lead Sweden step by step toward decentralization," said the 54-year-old Center Party leader, the head of a three-party coalition that defeated the Socialists. "We are going to break the power concentration. It will not happen overnight, but I promise that our supporters will not have to wait long before noticing results."

By all accounts Mr. Falldin's central issue, the outgoing Government's plan to build nuclear power plants as a means of reducing Swedish dependence on imported oil, proved pivotal among younger voters alarmed over potential radioactive hazards.

The Victory Was Striking

Coupled with other issues—what is viewed as the arrogance and smugness of the proliferating bureaucracy, the longevity of Social Democratic control, high taxes, the overconcentration of state power, the neglect of the countryside in favor of the cities—Mr. Falldin and his coalition partners in the Liberal and Moderate Parties scored a striking victory.

Mr. Falldin, who is to be formally designated Prime Minister after Parliament opens next month, offers a vivid contrast to the man he is succeeding, Olof Palme, leader of the Socialists—a factor that undoubtedly helped him in the campaign. Mr. Palme is tough, shrewd, sometimes abrasive and an elegant theoretician; Mr. Falldin exudes common sense and honesty.

"He's like your next-door neighbor," a Social Democratic politician commented. "He's rural Sweden. He's what people think of as typically Swedish, a plodder. I respect him. He's a clever man, an honest man."

On the other hand, a prominent Social Democratic figure said angrily: "He's without experience, without imagination, without intelligence. He knows nothing of foreign affairs. He can't speak English. A disaster!"

Thorbjorn Falldin—the surname is pronounced fell-deen—was born on April 24, 1922, in Hogsjö, in northern Sweden. His family were farmers, and Mr. Falldin now lives with his wife and three children on a hilltop farm near his birthplace: they raise sheep, grow potatoes and cut timber. Although he maintains a one-room apartment in Stockholm, he spends every weekend and holiday on his farm, which consists of 25 acres of field and 590 acres of forest.

Completing formal schooling at age 19, Mr. Falldin became active in agrarian politics in his early twenties. He was elected to Parliament in 1958, lost his seat by 11 votes in 1964 and regained it in 1967. He became vice chairman of the Center Party in 1969 and was named party leader two years later.

Mr. Falldin's opposition to Mr. Palme's ambitious nuclear-power program developed when a fellow legislator introduced him to the 1970 Swedish Nobel laureate in physics, Hannes Alfvén. Mr. Falldin said that the physicist told him of growing skepticism among scientists about the possibility of mastering the disposal of nuclear waste and preventing the sabotage of power stations. Since then Mr. Falldin has staked his career on the issue.

It is now believed that a turning point in the campaign came during a nationwide television debate between Mr. Palme and Mr. Falldin, who raised the nuclear issue and spoke with rare emotion about it.

"Olof Palme," he said, "can you stand here this evening on this platform and guarantee that you give to the generation of today, to coming generations, a better society when you want to give them a nuclear power society? Can you give this guarantee here this evening?" Mr. Palme said nothing.

THAILAND EX-LEADER NOW BEGS AS MONK

BANGKOK, Thailand, Sept. 20 (AP)—Thanom Kittikachorn, front man for the military dictatorship ousted in 1973, walked the streets of Bangkok today, with shaved head, wearing the saffron robes of a Buddhist monk and begging door to door for his food.

The 66-year-old former Prime Minister and field marshal returned yesterday from exile in Singapore to enter a Buddhist monastery. Government leaders indicated that he might be allowed to stay unless his presence set off violent protests.

Several members of Parliament suggested that he be sent to live in a Thai Buddhist temple in India. Student and labor leaders called for his deportation or trial on charges of ordering the army to shoot during the 1973 uprising, in which 72 civilians were killed.

The initial reaction was muted compared with that following the secret return last month of Mr. Thanom's right-hand man, Praphes Charusthien, who was sent back into exile after violent demonstrations.

TESTING LAG ED TO PARENTS

Believes That Children Have Proper Supervision and Attention, Poll Discloses

By GENE L. MAEROFF

Two-thirds of Americans surveyed in a poll believe that parents bear responsibility for the controversy over the decline in the country's schools. The poll also discloses that parents are not provided with sufficient attention, concern and supervision for their children.

The poll is contained in the annual public attitudes toward the schools that will be published next month by Phi Delta Kappan, a professional journal.

The poll shows that parents themselves, are readily accountable and are not trying to burden the schools, as one of them to do," says a 67-page survey on which the journal is based.

From the report, however, since in the public schools are at a low level, and that while the schools accept a role in the decline, the majority of the people surveyed with what is happening in the classrooms.

The main findings of the survey conducted by the Gallup Organization for the Developmental Activities, Inc., and the Charles F. Kettering Foundation, Ohio:

Discipline is the leading problem seen in the schools.

Teaching of basic skills is the most important step toward improving the schools.

Ability to think for oneself is being the quality that can most contribute to the educational development of the child.

Parents should take on a larger share of responsibility for the moral behavior of their children.

Other Reasons Cited

When asked why we have come to the end of permissiveness is yet to be reported says. "The fact is, however, that the public is now stricter rules dealing with the young and higher standard public schools."

Most frequently cited reasons for the decline in test scores, besides the lack of discipline, were lack of student interest, too much television viewing, and less attention to students.

When asked for possible explanations for the decline and were asked to give these reasons and then tell which ones you think are most responsible for this decline.

Seventy percent included the reason of parents in their replies.

Americans apparently would like to see parents of school-aged children do something about their own behavior in an effort to improve the schools.

Reasons For Parents Proposed

Seventy-seven percent of those polled believed that it would be a good idea to offer courses for parents to help them deal with their children. Half of those surveyed say that they would be willing to pay additional taxes to support such courses.

This is the seventh time in the eight polls that have been conducted that have identified discipline as the leading problem in the public schools.

The most frequently mentioned reasons for the decline in test scores, in descending order, were discipline and busing, lack of proper support and poor curriculums. About the curriculum quality declined from last year to this year. In the public schools, 13 percent of respondents gave the schools a quality of the work they are doing a grade of "B," 28 percent gave "D," 6 percent "F" and 1 percent omitted a rating.

The group least satisfied with the schools in terms of the ratings was parents from 18 to 29 years old, who have been students most often.

There is a feeling of rising disenchantment with public schools was that 65 percent of those surveyed would like to see all high school students be required to pass a nationwide examination to get a diploma. In 1958, only 50 percent said they favored such a test.

The survey was conducted in April through the polling of 1,549 men and women 18 and older, a nationally representative sample of the country. Parents were representative of the country in terms of race, religion, age, occupation, political affiliation, education and community residence, according to the Gallup Poll.

UPHOLDS REPORTER WITHHELD HIS SOURCE

A federal judge in Brooklyn yesterday ruled in favor of a Newsweek reporter, Mr. Marro, to refuse to divulge the source of a story he had written.

Judge Henry Bramwell held that knowing the source would be "immaterial and irrelevant" to the case under consideration and that the testimony would be a violation of the reporter's rights under the First Amendment of the Constitution.

E. Gallina, lawyer for Dominicus Marro, had subpoenaed Mr. Marro to testify in a case seeking to prove that his client was suspected of being a major drug dealer who had been beaten and tortured by agents or under the direction of agents in Senegal before he fled aboard a flight to the United States.

Judge Bramwell said the article, published in the Aug. 16 issue of Newsweek, was written with methods used by the Enforcement Administration to identify other narcotics suspect Auguste Marro to the United States from Paris. Therefore, he said, the information bearing on the Orsini case.

Orsini faces trial on charges of smuggling more than a quarter ton of heroin and cocaine into the United States between 1968 and 1971. He is held in $1.5 million bail.

End of Cuban Refugee Program Recommended by Federal Panel

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20 (AP)—A Federal task force recommended today that the Cuban Refugee Program, which has helped 650,000 Cubans fleeing the Castro regime resettle in the United States during the last 15 years, be phased out within five years.

The report to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare said that fewer than 5,000 refugees still received special cash grants and that number is expected to shrink by 1,500 persons a year during the next two years.

Until the program is phased out, the panel said, the refugee program's headquarters should be moved from Miami to Washington to "improve management and clarify policy direction."

Established in February 1961, the Cuban Refugee Program has spent $1.1 billion for cash, medical and social services. Officials said 465,000 refugees registered under the program and 300,000 were given resettlement aid.

Slowed to a Trickle
This year the Government spent $85 million on the program, of which $70 million was for welfare assistance, $12.5 million for aid to schools in Dade County Fla., where an estimated 465,000 refugees reside, and $2.3 million for administrative and miscellaneous expenses.

The report said the flood of refugees had slowed to a trickle. Last July, only 489 persons registered, most of whom came had come from Cuba to the United States through other countries. The single biggest year of the program was in 1972, when 90,000 refugees were receiving cash assistance.

The report said that more refugees were applying for citizenship, which rendered them ineligible for special refugee assistance. They may, however, qualify for other programs such as Aid to Families with Dependent Children. State and local governments are required to pay half the costs of that program in contrast with the Cuban Refugee Program, which is paid for entirely by the Federal Government.

Negotiations Recommended
Today's report recommended that the Federal Government negotiate with Florida and Dade County to provide medical care for refugees still requiring assistance, transfer the delivery of refugee social services to Federal programs, covering all low-income persons, phase out the special refugee student loan program and work out a new arrangement to compensate Dade County for educating refugee children.

Robert Fulton, administrator of H.E.W.'s Social and Rehabilitation Service, said he would take no action on the recommendations until he had received comments from Florida, Dade County and Ricardo Nunez, the director of the Cuban Refugee Program.

Butz Orders Cent-a-Gallon Rise in Milk Support to Aid Farmers

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20 (UPI)—Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz announced today an increase of 1 cent a gallon in Government milk supports, effective Oct. 1, but predicted it would have only "minimal" impact on consumer prices. Retail prices for most dairy products now are above the new support levels, Dr. Butz said in a statement.

He said the support floor for manufacturing-grade milk, now $8.13 per hundred pounds, would be raised to $8.28 Oct. 1, the beginning of the third quarter of the 1976-77 dairy marketing year. Since a gallon of milk weighs 8.6 pounds, the rise of 13 cents per hundred pounds amounts to 1.1 cent a gallon.

Dr. Butz said he ordered the increase partly to help farmers offset rising costs of feed, equipment and other items, and to help prevent a slide in milk production this winter because of recent droughts.

r Accuses Public Hospitals in New York City of Conducting Illegal Experiments on Some Patients

BY EYER KIHSS
A study of research on human beings conducted yesterday that New York City hospitals had engaged in "unsuspecting" patients for whom, according to no "informed consent" formed consent of a relative or legal guardian.

The lawyer-critic, Neil S. Wolfram, of 200 Park Avenue, who has been working on a book attacking patient research in public and private hospitals, contended that "medical experiments on diseased patients have constituted criminal assault, malpractice per se and breach of implied contract for treatment and care throughout the history of Anglo-American jurisprudence."

Legal Competency Challenged

Mr. Wolfram contended that alcoholics, mentally ill persons and children were "legally incompetent and, therefore, unable to give consent."

But he said that alcoholics, who had gone to the detoxification unit at Kings County Hospital Center in Brooklyn had been "detoxified and then re-intoxicated through massive doses of alcohol for periods of three consecutive weeks while the staff performs personality, biochemical and behavioral tests on them."

Bellevue Hospital Center in Manhattan and Goldwater Memorial Hospital on Roosevelt Island, he said, have carried out experiments with lithium with psychiatric patients.

Dr. Rothschild said the alcoholism studies, sponsored by the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism, had involved "detoxified alcoholics who were capable of giving, under all the laws we know, informed consent," and they had given it. Alcoholics, he said, are not incompetent unless drunk.

The studies, Dr. Rothschild said, were to aid understanding of why people drink and why some get sick when they do. They had been carried on for five or six years, he said, under the direction of Dr. Milton Gross, but ended with his sudden death at the age of 47 a month ago.

Bellevue, Dr. Rothschild said, carried out pioneering studies that led to the use of lithium as a major development in treatment of manic illnesses with work in its psychiatric department, headed by Dr. Alexander Thomas, with Dr. Samuel Gershon as a leading investigator.

"The fact that somebody is mentally ill does not mean he can't understand an issue," Dr. Thomas commented. Patients who took part in the lithium research, started a decade ago, he said, had been evaluated as competent by senior staff members not engaged in the studies, as well as by lawyers of the Mental Health Information Service.

Approach Called Conservative

"There's a whole body of law on third-party consent issues for children," Dr. Rothschild said. "We've taken the most conservative position. We have been criticized by some doctors that this may prevent research in certain genetic illnesses."

Mr. Wolfram argued that even a signed consent for medical experiment was invalid "because the criminal law does not create an exception for acts which are against public policy by virtue of the consent of the victim."

Mr. Wolfram, 43 years old, is a 1958 graduate of Syracuse University Law School who was admitted to the bar here in 1961 after three years' service as an Air Force captain. His practice is principally corporate and securities law, but he is currently counsel for a suit against a voluntary hospital for a client claiming to have been victimized by experimentation.

Irving, a Loser on Hughes Book, Wins Case With Own Legal Brief

By ROY R. SILVER

Special to The New York Times

WESTBURY, L.I., SEPT. 20—Clifford Irving, who served 17 months in a Federal prison for conspiracy and fraud in connection with his bogus book about Howard Hughes, the late billionaire, has had more success as a "lawyer" than he did as a biographer.

The 45-year-old author acted as his own defense attorney five months ago on a Government charge of having "knowingly and fraudulently" concealed income in a financial statement to the Internal Revenue Service after he filed a voluntary petition of bankruptcy. Mr. Irving was announced as the winner of the case today, with the bankruptcy court judge dismissing the Government's civil complaint.

The Department of Justice, acting on behalf of the I.R.S., had asked the court to direct that Mr. Irving pay $127,000 in back taxes for the $785,000 advance he received from the McGraw-Hill publishing company or that a general discharge of all his liabilities be denied him.

No Intentional Omission

In a 14-page decision made public today after a three-day civil trial last April, Judge William J. Rudin ruled that Mr. Irving "did not intentionally omit" any reference to $44,000 that he received in connection with a film that had been made from his book "Fake," based on the life of an alleged art forger.

Judge Rudin found that the financial statement, written in the Federal penitentiary in Danbury, Conn., on Sept. 18, 1973, during which time "he had no assistance or advice" in preparing the statement, was not issued "with the intention to deceive."

Citing liabilities of $110 million and assets of $770, including an old typewriter, a 1967 car and an "inoperable sailboat," Mr. Irving filed a petition in bankruptcy on June 25, 1975, and on the same day was adjudged bankrupt. Mr. Irving, who is visiting New York

City on business, expressed satisfaction when he learned of the court's decision today.

"When I was in court defending myself, I apologized to Judge Rudin for what I thought 'may have been a prolongation of the proceedings on my part."

"He said: 'No, that's all right, you're doing a lot better than many of the attorneys who appeared before me.'" Mr. Irving added. "But, he was very strict with me and said he was not there to give me any advice or be my attorney."

Mr. Irving said he had used a model brief "dug up from my original law firm" and then went to the Palm Beach Law Library "while I was living and asked like any other citizen off the beach: 'How does it work? Where do I do the research?'"

"The clerk explained it to me and I spent two days in the library looking up applicable cases," the author continued. "Then I wrote the brief. It was 50 pages long and in two sections—facts and arguments—and I mailed it to the court on Aug. 5."

When the Government lawyer submitted his brief, Mr. Irving responded with a seven-page rebuttal "because it was full of errors and illogical arguments." "It was one of the most satisfying works I've ever written," he said with a laugh.

Mr. Irving said he expected to spend the next six months in Mexico "pegging away on a novel I'm working on about Ibiza, an island off the coast of Spain that I lived on many years ago."

The Government's case was based on Mr. Irving's failure to include in the financial statement the receipt of the $44,000 for the film "Reichenbach," which was sold in October 1974. Mr. Irving said his lawyer had told him that his interest in the film was worthless.

YALE TEACHER QUILTS OVER PRO-NAZI ROLE

Admits Anti-Semitic Writing in '43, but Says He Is Now a Zionist—Colleagues Spurred Resignation

NEW HAVEN, Sept. 20 (AP)—A Yale University teacher of Russian has resigned under pressure from his colleagues because of his newly disclosed work for the Nazis during World War II in the German-occupied Soviet Union.

Vladimir Sokolov-Samarin, a 63-year-old lecturer in Russian literature, resigned this summer after other members of the department had learned of his writings from a Soviet magazine, The Yale Daily News reported today.

In an interview in Russian with a News reporter, Mr. Sokolov-Samarin admitted having written anti-Semitic editorials in 1943 for Rech, a pro-Nazi newspaper published in the occupied Soviet town of Melitopol.

But Mr. Sokolov-Samarin, who has taught at Yale for 17 years and is now a Zionist, said that anti-Bolshevism, not anti-Semitism, had been his overriding sentiment.

'Under Control of Censor'

"I would say to the censor, 'We have written against Bolshevism,' and the censor would say, 'Yes, against Bolshevism and Jews.' I was under the control of the censor," Mr. Samarin said.

He added that he had not known at the time that Jews are being exterminated by the Germans. "If I had known they were being killed, I never would have written those things," he said.

His work was disclosed in April by a Soviet Yiddish-language journal, Sovietish Heimland. Mr. Sokolov-Samarin said that the article about him was part of a Soviet effort, led by the K.G.B. secret office, to discredit him because he was leading anti-Communist and critic of the Soviet Government.

He also said that the author of the article, Arkady Sachnin, was a colonel in the K.G.B.

Robert Jackson, chairman of the department of Slavic languages and literature at Yale, described Mr. Sokolov-Samarin's writing as "Goebbels-like." Copies of the journal were given to Mr. Jackson in May, but no official action was taken against Mr. Sokolov-Samarin.

Letter From Professors

However, four of the six professors in the department wrote to Mr. Sokolov-Samarin: "[The writing] reveals to us beyond any reasonable doubt that you were engaged not only in anti-Communist but also in pro-Nazi and anti-Semitic activities under the German occupation."

In one editorial, Mr. Sokolov-Samarin wrote that every time he heard a Jewish name he imagined "a large yellow patch with a protruding mug." Mr. Sachnin said. At other times he advocated violence against "kikes" and praised the German leadership.

One of the four Professors, Edward Skowronski, said the letter had been sent to pressure Mr. Sokolov-Samarin to resign. "We don't feel the department should be attacked for harboring ex-Fascist and an anti-Semite," he said.

Mr. Sokolov-Samarin, who has been in poor health, said he had resigned when he began feeling the intended pressure from the other members of the department.

"When such pressure occurs," he said, "there is nothing to do but resign. It would have been unpleasant for me, unpleasant for the university. I love the diversity but . . ."

Plans to Write Memoirs

Mr. Sokolov-Samarin will continue to draw his pay from Yale through July 1977 and also will get a pension from a national teachers' organization, The Yale Daily News said. Mr. Sokolov-Samarin, who intended to resign anyway within two years, said he also planned to write his memoirs.

He said that in recent years he had become an avid pro-Zionist because he believed it was the best way to fight communism. He contributed frequently to a New York-based Russian-language newspaper that supports Zionist causes, that paper, Novoye Russkoye Slovo, has refused to publish his work since the disclosure, The News said.

Mr. Samarin said he had aided the Germans because they were anti-Communists. "The enemy of my enemy is my friend," he said. "I know no nationalities, only communist and anti-Communist." He said he now believed that Jews and anti-Communists had the same goal, "to liquidate the Soviet system."

General Says Army Was Overruled By Rumsfeld on 2-Nation Tank

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20 (AP)—The Army's second-highest general testified today that every responsible Army official recommended against Secretary of Defense Donald H. Rumsfeld's decision to build a hybrid United States-German tank.

Gen. Walter T. Kerwin Jr., Army vice chief of staff, told the House Armed Services Committee that the Army had argued to Mr. Rumsfeld that the decision could only delay production of the United States XM-1 tank and increase its cost without improving it.

"It sounds to me like you had a pretty good case," said the acting chairman, Samuel S. Stratton, Democrat of upstate New York.

"We thought we did," the general replied.

U.S. Weighs Asylum for Hijackers Who Killed Stewardess in Flight

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20—The Immigration and Naturalization Service said today that no decision had been made on whether to grant asylum to two Lithuanians who killed a Soviet stewardess in a hijacking six years ago.

The two, Pragas Brazinskis and his son, Algirdas, were charged last week with having illegally entered the United States. They are now free on bond.

The Brazinskises were convicted of manslaughter in Turkey in 1974, and were in a Turkish prison until early this year. The Soviet Union has asked for their extradition.

Ford, Easier Home Purchases and the Election Campaign

By ALAN S. OSER

There was a certain American-as-apple quality to President Ford's pronouncements on housing when he formally opened his election campaign in Ann Arbor last week. His pitch, indirectly, was to the young, middle-class family aspiring to buy a home. These would be the principal presumed beneficiaries of his call for a reduction in the down payment required for a mortgage guaranteed by the Federal Housing Administration. And these voters would also be helped by the "life-cycle" concept — low debt-service payments in the early years of mortgage loans and rising payments as the years go on and the owner's income rises. The President proposed to try this experimentally.

To housing specialists these proposals are modest in terms of cost and potential achievement. To President Ford they evidently have what looms as the important political virtue of specificity.

What they do not do — and what at this point seems not too likely — is to define any differences that may exist between Democratic and Republican candidates on the scope or direction of national housing policy.

One reason for this is that housing discussion, once it gets specific, bogs down into technical talk about this program or that program that hardly anyone can follow. What matters normally in practice is an incumbent President's approach to inflation and employment.

The amount of Government stimulus to be given to the housing sector is normally part of total economic policy.

In that context, one prediction from a thoughtful outsider was that a Carter Administration would be "10 percent higher on new construction" than a Ford Administration and that both parties would try to increase rehabilitation of existing housing as opposed to new construction in programs that call for direct Government subsidy.

In the slow economic recovery under way nationally, single-family home construction has been making a comeback even without great Federal stimulus. To help the still sagging multifamily sector, which includes urban and suburban apartments, Congress authorized the release of $10 billion through the secondary mortgage market. The Ford Administration, going slow, released $3 billion in January and $2 billion just this month.

Money at 7 1/2% Interest

What this does is make available mortgage money at 7 1/2 percent — a couple of interest-rate points below market — through various Federal Housing Administration mortgage insurance programs. It should eventually stimulate apartments for the middle class, though not in time for a political payoff for President Ford.

In the 1960's the Democrats were willing to sponsor an enormous infusion of Federal funds directly into housing for low-income people in the cities.

This was done through heavy subsidies of the interest rate on mortgages, bringing apartment costs down to the point at which poor people can afford the rent. It spurred much new construction and made it possible to link housing to a suburban strategy.

Hardly anyone thinks that either party would undertake such an approach again since it proved so expensive and imperfect. The debate on helping the urban poor through housing subsidies is likely to turn on the use of the new so-called "Section 8" program, which provides for subsidies to the renter rather than to the producer. For perhaps different reasons, neither Mr. Ford nor Mr. Carter is likely to try to exploit that weapon for new construction, however. Instead, if its administrative complexities can be solved, it will go into existing housing to help poorer people pay the rent.

Some of Mr. Carter's advisers are likely to push for a return to public housing construction as a way of helping the urban poor, a return to customary Democratic emphasis on construction in the housing field, rather than indirect subsidies.

Public Housing Push Likely

Some, from the urban areas of the Northeast, will push for a more regionally oriented use of Government policy tools, so that proportionately more help goes to those areas where the gap between market rents and people's ability to pay is greatest.

Nevertheless, in the absence of specifically defined urban or regional strategy from either candidate, and in the face of the probable cost-consciousness of both, it is so far difficult to see them as wide apart on housing issues.

As for the President's proposals themselves, builders tended to belittle the one on halving the down payment in a purchase of an insured new house. In most areas of the country, private mortgage insurance already makes it possible to get the down payment down to 5 percent on a home costing up to $45,000.

The current F.H.A. down payment requirement is 3 percent of the first $25,000 in purchase price ($750), 10 percent of the next $10,000 ($1,000) and 20 percent of the next $10,000 ($2,000), up to $3,750 for a $45,000 home.

"There's so little new going through the F.H.A. no plan is like picking lint w gloves," said one builder.

The graduate payment moratorium on the other hand, would be a mental departure. A buyer's level payments of 3 percent 10 years of a 30-year mortgage make up the difference between the market rate through means in years 11 to 30, stimulate demand by young home buyers. Democrats, no doubt prove.

She is attempting to enlist support because he is an e subject and because Democrats is needed if the proposal is to Congress, she said. She added price supports were Mr. Carter's support of corn, minimum government and reduced government expenditure a new ally."

Now on Sale from TWA.

The spectacular West is now on sale at TWA.
There's no better time to see it. Because right now TWA's Discover America fares are the lowest they'll be for the year.
And you can fly any day of the week, any time of the day.

Once you get where you're going, you can take a TWA Freewheeler vacation. The most flexible, value-packed fly/drive in the business. Whether you want to just fly to the West or tour it at your own pace, you may never get another chance like this.

Airfares are subject to change.

TWA's Discover America Night Coach Excursion Fare.

Save 25%

Reservations for TWA's Discover America Fares must be made at least 14 days before you want to fly. In order to save 25% off the regular Coach fare, you must book on a TWA Designated Night Coach. Tickets must be purchased no more than 10 days after you've made your reservation and at least 14 days before your departure or return. Stay 7-30 days. There's a limited number of seats per flight on which we offer these savings, so make plans early.

Save up to 50%

As you can see above, children (2-11) traveling with you can fly at 50% off the regular Coach fare with our Discover America fares, and 47% off with our Night Coach fare.

The lowest-priced fly/drive program in the business.

Fly/Drive $15<sup>76</sup>
West a day per person

With a TWA Freewheeler West, you can fly to the West in comfort and save a lot of time and energy for visiting and touring.
You'll get an air-conditioned Ramada car with unlimited mileage plus a choice of 264 Ramada, Quality and Best Western Hotels and Motels. (Some hotels have seasonal or year-round surcharges which are payable locally.)

TWA also has two other fly/drive programs so ask your Travel Agent about the Hertz Freewheeler and Hertz Holiday Inn plans, too. Prices are for a minimum of 7 nights, based on double occupancy, and do not include airfare.

U.S. Cancer Institute Head Quits To Join American Cancer Society

By HAROLD M. SCHEMCK Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20—Dr. Frank J. Rauscher Jr., director of the National Cancer Institute during its rapid expansion in the last four years, will leave about Nov. 1 to become senior vice president for research of the American Cancer Society.

Dr. Rauscher, a virus expert, sent a letter to President Ford today saying he would resign. The scientist was appointed director of the institute in May 1972 by former President Nixon, about four months after Congress approved a major expansion of the institute's programs of research into cancer.

The institute's annual budget has risen from about $377 million the year Dr. Rauscher was appointed to about $815 million this year.

In an announcement today, Dr. Benjamin F. Byrd Jr., president of the cancer society, said that Dr. Rauscher's appointment would further advance the society's varied and imaginative research programs and bring new initiatives to the search for causes and cures of cancer.

A Private Group

The cancer society, a private group, was one of the main proponents of the expanded campaign against cancer authorized by Congress in December 1971.

Dr. Rauscher, a scientist at the National Cancer Institute for about 17 years, is the discoverer of a virus that produces a form of leukemia in mice. The virus has become a valuable tool in cancer research because of the rapidity with which it acts in susceptible rodents. It is now called the Rauscher Leukemia Virus and has been studied by an estimated 800 scientific laboratories throughout the world.

Access to White House

The law passed in 1971 made the director of the cancer institute a Presidential appointee with more direct access to the White House than other officers of the National Institutes of Health, of which the cancer institute is a major unit. Since his appointment, Dr. Rauscher has been pursuing a research policy designed to maintain a balance between basic studies of cancer and efforts to improve the general application of existing knowledge.

His decision to leave the institute is believed to be based largely on economics. His salary as director of the institute was $37,800 a year. A proposal to raise his salary and those of other directors of the National Institutes of Health to $52,000 died earlier this month in the House Commerce Committee on a vote of 13 to 13. A majority would have been needed to put the measure before the full House.

In answer to a question today, a spokesman for the American Cancer Society said that Dr. Rauscher's salary would be $75,000 a year.

Emphasis in Cancer Research

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 20 (AP)—Leaders of two groups sponsoring the eighth National Conference on Cancer Research and Clinical Investigation said today that the main emphasis in cancer research is not on finding a cure but on patient survival.

Dr. Benjamin F. Byrd Jr., president of the American Cancer Society, and Dr. Guy R. Newall, deputy director of the government's National Cancer Institute, talked with reporters at the conference began. About 900 physicians were expected for the three-day meeting.

The two men said that the conference was designed to bring physicians up to date on developments in cancer research. Both physicians agreed survival rates were improving on a national level and although neither expressed any great hope for an overall cancer cure in the near future, they said there had been significant progress in the treatment of individual types of cancer.

Dr. Byrd said that one of the more encouraging developments recently had been a multimethod approach to treatment. He said that the methods included surgery, radiotherapy, chemotherapy and immunization.

We think it's time we raised our voice and not just our rates.

We see a growing set of circumstances that is having a potentially disastrous effect not only on the insurance industry but on every person in American society. Liability losses in both personal and business areas have moved steadily and rapidly upward until rates have gone beyond the reach of many people. And the cost of paying ever larger and more numerous losses results in higher prices for many of the goods and services that you buy.

Here are some examples of situations that you pay for.

In many parts of the country the cost of a hospital room (not including doctors, special nurses and medicine) is approaching $200 per day.

A $4,438 automobile costs $19,979 when bought part by part as your repair shop must do, according to the Journal of American Insurance.

In some parts of the country the burning of automobiles in order to collect insurance has reached near-epidemic proportions.

In the area of medical malpractice suits, in one state, ten times as many million-dollar awards have been made since 1970 as in all the years before. (You may want to go over that one again.) The growing volume of such suits is adding more than $3 billion to the nation's annual cost of health care, according to HEW.

During a recent five-year period the average claim settlement in product liability cases has increased by 300%. The resultant astronomical liability protection costs have put some manufacturing companies out of business and threaten still others.

Despite higher premiums, the insurance industry, last year alone, had an underwriting loss of over $4 billion in casualty-property lines.

These are only the direct costs and their effects. The indirect effects hit every one of us, in the form of higher product prices, higher costs for health care, unavailability of needed goods and services, in hundreds of ways, in every sector of our lives.

The next manufactured product you buy may cost many dollars more because the manufacturer's liability protection costs shot up. Further, these are dollars that might have gone for engineering improvements that could have lengthened its life.

Or your doctor bills. In many cases they've gone up because of rising malpractice premiums. And there are indications they'll go even higher as doctors are forced to turn more and more to the practice of "defensive" medicine. That is, taking X rays, ordering diagnostic tests, etc., etc., when there may be little recognized medical need for them.

Who's at fault? We're all at fault. How else could it happen? But that isn't the point. The point is, none of us can go on pretending it isn't happening.

Is it hopeless? We don't think so. In fact, all indications are that this country is stirring itself awake. And we intend to continue to raise our voice on these matters. Because the more you know about the problems, the more likely we can all work together toward effective solutions.

We're working with government agencies, industry associations, and private companies to do what we can to solve these problems. But we need your help. We'd like to know what you think and how you feel about insurance-related problems. And we'll share our ideas on these issues with you. Just drop a letter to our Office of Consumer Information, One Tower Square, Hartford, Conn. 06115.

Then maybe you won't just blame your insurance company and your agent. You'll raise your voice, too, by talking to your neighbors and friends, writing your representatives in government and contacting your insurance commissioner.

Teamsters Tell I.R.S. of Changes in Pension Fund, Arguing That It Again Deserves Tax-Exempt Status

By LEE DEMBART
Special to The New York Times

CHICAGO, Sept. 20—The principal pension fund of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, shaken by government investigations, filed documents today with the Internal Revenue Service arguing that the fund is now in complete compliance with all requirements of law.

Extensive changes in the fund's management and benefit programs were detailed in support of the application, which was made by the Central States, Southeast and Southwest Area Pension Fund in an effort to regain the tax-exempt status that was revoked late in June after findings of mismanagement and questionable loan practices.

Since the revocation, the pension fund has conducted an all-out campaign in the press and its relations with the Federal Government to paint a picture of changes that have cleaned up the fund, which is under investigation by the Labor and Justice Departments as well as by the tax agency.

Revised Description of Fund

It has argued and continues to argue that whatever wrongdoings may have occurred in the past, the fund is now being properly run. In some respects, a fund spokesman said today, the revised pension plan is now more liberal than the Federal Pension Reform Act requires.

Today's application to the I.R.S., which may take a year or longer to be acted on, included a completely revised description of the fund and its benefits and supporting materials that described a major overhaul of the operations and administrative procedures of the fund, which has been the object of charges of corruption, underworld dealings, kickbacks and pay-offs for 20 years.

To the extent that the new provisions were written with the requirements of the Federal pension law in mind, they demonstrate that the law is succeeding in guaranteeing to workers the benefits they believed they were working for.

Question of Retroactivity

Though part of the tax revocation has been postponed by the I.R.S. until Nov. 30, the fund still remains liable for back taxes on its earnings retroactive to 1965. Today's filing sought to have the postponement extended until Feb. 28, 1977 and to give the fund permanent tax exemption. It left open the question of the retroactivity on back taxes.

The most significant changes in the pension plan disclosed today bring it into compliance with the law regarding so-called vesting—how long a worker must be employed before his pension benefits cannot be taken away from him—and breaks in service—what happens if a worker leaves his job and is not covered for a period of time.

In the past, there were no vesting provisions in the plan, but now a worker has a non-forfeitable right to 100 percent of the vested pension benefit "once contributions have been made for a minimum of 20 weeks in each of 10 years," according to the filing.

Under the teamsters' collective bargaining agreement, some 16,800 employees contribute up to $25 a week for each of 380,000 workers. No contributions are required from the employees.

The new break in service rules, effective Jan. 1, 1976, adopt the formula of the pension law, which considers a break in service to have occurred whenever a worker is out of a pension plan longer than he was in it. However, the Central States fund will not consider any suspension of employment for less than three years a break in service, even though the pension law would allow it.

Benefits to Survivor

Today's filing also for the first time contains an accrual formula—as required by the pension law—under which a worker earns 3 percent of his normal retirement benefit for each year of service.

Still another change in the fund will allow a surviving spouse to receive for the remainder of his or her life no less than 50 percent of the benefit that the family would have received had no death occurred. This provision is also required by the law.

The fund also said that the Wyatt Company, actuarial and benefits consultants, had been retained to study the will there be any type of benefits reduction requirements and implications of the revised plan. But the fund spokesman said that "under no circumstances" because of the changed rules.

Although nothing in today's application said so explicitly, the clear implication was that the trustees of the fund—two of whom resigned last week and several more of whom are expected to resign—will play a considerably diminished role in determining future investments.

VIKING 2 TO EXPLORE NORTH POLE OF MARS

Spacecraft to Take Pictures of Polar Region and Determine Composition of the Icecap

By WALTER SULLIVAN
Special to The New York Times

PASADENA, Calif., Sept. 20—Exploration of the north pole region of Mars, with its unexplained terracing and its clues to past Martian climate, is to begin Friday when the flight path of the Viking 2 orbiter is changed for that purpose.

The spacecraft's orbital plane will be adjusted to carry it within 15 degrees of the pole, making possible the first relatively detailed pictures of that partially ice-covered region.

A prime objective is to determine whether, in what is now the latter half of the Martian summer, all of the ice cap is frozen water or whether there is a residue of frozen carbon dioxide, or "dry ice."

Interest in Amount of Ice

Also of major interest is the amount of ice in the polar area. Does it represent a large reservoir of water and carbon dioxide that melts on occasion, providing Mars with a heavier atmosphere and more livable conditions?

If the permanent icecap is several thousand feet thick, there may be glaciers flowing down some valleys or draped over cliffs. According to Dr. Geoffrey Briggs of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory here, a specialist on the polar regions of Mars, recording such features may come within the capabilities of the imaging system. The existence of such features on Mars "is by no means inconceivable," he said in an interview today, although it is also possible that the cap is less than a few hundred feet thick.

Proposals have been made for a later mission to carry a radar that could echo off both the ice surface and the rock beneath it, thus determining how thick the ice is. Such radars are being used in the Antarctic. Another proposal would be to drop probes heated by a nuclear battery to melt their way down until they hit bedrock. Several would probably be necessary to allow for the possibility that the first one hits a rock embedded in the ice.

Panel Considers Proposals

Today, the Committee on Planetary and Lunar Exploration of the Space Science Board began meeting at the California Institute of Technology here to consider such proposals for future space exploration. The board helps to set policy for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

The repeated photographic and infrared-sensing passes over the Martian north pole area may cast light on the origin and nature of the planet's symmetrically terraced, many-layered terrain. Terraces exist in both polar regions and tend to lie along concentric circles centered close to but not identical with the pole.

It has been proposed that terraced terrain were formed when Mars was spinning around a slightly different axis, creating climatic conditions differing from those of today. The terraces seem to form steps. Each step is several thousand feet high and is composed of a score or more of layers that are exposed near the edge like the layers visible in the walls of the Grand Canyon.

An infrared scanner carried by the orbiter to record water vapor in the Martian atmosphere has shown in recent weeks that air over the region just south of the north pole cap is very moist by Martian standards. This may be from water evaporating as the cap melts and retreats.

Another infrared device will determine the temperature of the polar ice, indicating whether it is frozen water, carbon dioxide or a mixture of both. If it is pure carbon dioxide, the temperature under Martian conditions should be minus 193 degrees Fahrenheit. If it is water, the temperature should be minus 112 degrees.

Until now, the Viking 2 orbiter has served as a relay station for pictures and data transmitted by the Viking 1 lander. Today, the orbit of the Viking 1 orbiter is being changed slightly so that by Friday it will make a daily pass over the Viking 2 lander. This will relieve the other orbiter for its polar mission.

Meanwhile, preparations are being made for a series of new sample collections by the Viking 2 lander. On Saturday, the long-armed sampler is to reach out to a patch of crusty soil possibly formed of residues left by water evaporation similar to that in arid areas on Earth.

The purpose of the operation is to see whether, under protection of the salty crust, organic molecules produced by life may have survived the scorching ultraviolet rays of sunlight. Six photographs will be taken to monitor each step of this operation.

A week later, samples are to be collected and analyzed in various ways for biological activity. An X-ray device will catalogue elements composing the Martian surface. An attempt at X-ray analysis last Friday was frustrated when the collector failed to deliver any material to the device.

Finally, on Oct. 3, the Viking 2 lander will attempt to roll over a stone and, four days later, collect material from beneath it. Reproductions of candidate rocks are being manufactured by a company in Houston and flown here so that those operating the collector can practice on them. A duplicate of the Viking lander here, sitting on sand and tilted the same way as the lander on Mars, will be used for these exercises.

Question Opens Trial of Mandel And 4 Friends

By BEN A. FRANKLIN

BALTIMORE, Sept. 20—The political corruption trial of Governor Marvin Mandel of Maryland and four accused co-conspirators finally began in Federal Court here today with a blistering prosecution statement charging the two-term Democratic Governor and his friends with secretly exploiting his power for their mutual enrichment and then lying to cover it up.

Before a painstakingly-picked 12-member jury, whose selection had consumed nearly eight full days, the prosecution outlined for the first time today the scope of what the Government intended to prove and the nuances expected to arise in three to four months of testimony.

The main question, as put to the jury in a tough, three-hour introduction by Assistant United States Attorney Ernest D. Skolnik, the 38-year-old chief prosecutor in the case, is: "When does friendship become a euphemism for something corrupt and illegal?"

Defense lawyers will make their opening statements tomorrow.

'A Birthday Present'

The prosecutor charged that Mr. Mandel, 55, had received from his co-defendants not only the valuable shares in real estate interests previously alleged in the indictment issued last November, but also $1,500 worth of men's clothing "as a birthday present," a $1,000 payment on a Mandel life insurance premium and $5,000 worth of jewelry. "For members of the Governor's official family."

"Does that go too far?" asked Mr. Skolnik, who was the chief federal prosecutor in the investigations of former Vice President Spiro T. Agnew. "There is more that they did for Marvin Mandel, but maybe you won't need any more. We will prove that his friends did all that I have described with and for Marvin Mandel, and you will decide which of these other men knew about it and exploited it for their own ends."

Details of the jewelry transaction will have to await the presentation of prosecution evidence, but the inference today was plainly that the gifts had been chiefly for the Governor's second wife, Jeanne,

Gov. Marvin Mandel of Maryland and wife, Jeanne, near court in Baltimore who he married the day his divorce from his first wife became final in 1974.

Mr. Skolnik's first appearance before the jury was interrupted four times by defense objections, including one that led to a brief conference at the bench with United States District Judge John H. Platt.

A member of the United States District Court in Washington, Judge Pratt was pressed into service to try this case when all of the sitting Federal judges in Maryland disqualified themselves from hearing it because of legal or political associations with the Governor or his co-defendants.

Governor Mandel has charged repeatedly that this case was the result of "a political vendetta" against him.

The core of the Government's case is that Mr. Mandel, by manipulating the actions of the State Legislature, obtained for the co-defendants in 1971 and 1972 an enhancement of their secret investment in the Marlboro Race Track.

In return, Mr. Skolnik said, the Governor's friends then gave him clothing, jewelry, pre-paid vacation trips, and virtually cost-free shares in a Chesapeake Bay real estate venture with about $45-

000 and a suburban Baltimore office building complex worth about $140,000.

The other defendants are W. Dale Hess, 45, a former power in the State Legislature, Harry A. and William A. Rodgers, brothers, 48 and 49, who Mr. Skolnik said today had engaged Mr. Hess in their business ventures "for his friendship with Mr. Mandel," and Ernest N. Corey, 61, a lawyer described by the prosecutor as "willing to falsify letters and documents" in the furtherance of the bribery.

The trial of a fifth co-defendant, Irvin Kovens, 57, has been severed from this one and postponed because Mr. Kovens has suffered a recurrence of heart disease.

Episcopal Bishops Approve Revision of Prayer Book

By ELEANOR SLAU

MINNEAPOLIS, Sept. 20—Despite long and heated controversy over the issue, the Episcopal Church has shown overwhelming support for the most extensive revision of the Book of Common Prayer in more than 400 years.

The House of Bishops today approved the new book almost unanimously. The House of Deputies, the lay and clerical part of this legislative convention meeting here, approved it by a wide margin last Saturday.

Final action was delayed because of differences between the two versions. Unless deputies assent to the bishops' amendments, a committee from both houses will have to work out differences and present the compromise to each house for approval.

However, delegates thought there was virtually no doubt that the prayer book would be accepted before the convention ends Thursday.

Some Astonished by Vote

The strength of the vote among the deputies had astonished both sides in the controversy. In the clerical order, 107 dioceses had voted for it, three against and three were evenly divided. In the lay order, 90 dioceses had voted for, 12 against and nine were evenly divided.

The text must be approved again at the next convention, in 1979, to become the church's standard prayer book. Until then, the current book last revised in 1928, will remain the official document. What its fate will be should the new version be adopted in 1979 is uncertain. The House of Deputies repeatedly defeated attempts to permit continued use of the traditional book, long venerated for its stately language.

However, both the deputies and the House of Bishops agreed to provide for a commission to study the question.

Major Ecumenical Implications

A major difference between the bishops' and the deputies' versions had ecumenical implications. The deputies restored—and the bishops rejected—the words "and the Son" which would make part of the modern version of the Nicene Creed state that the Holy Spirit "proceeds from the Father and the Son."

The addition, known as the "filioque clause," alters text of the International Consultation on English Texts which is used by the Roman Catholic and many Protestant churches. It has been a focus of theological contention for many years between Eastern and Western churches.

Other differences in the bishops' resolution are not expected to meet strong resistance among the deputies. One would make the prayer book reflect the canonical change stipulating that women may be priests and bishops. Another has to do with confirmation.

The houses approved relatively few amendments to the revision that was presented by the church's Standing Liturgical Commission. One amendment had been urged by the commission itself. It deletes an optional section in the Friday liturgy, "The Repentance," which had been considered by many to be anti-Semitic.

Responding to that action, Rabbi Marc Tannenbaum, national interfaith affairs director of the American Jewish Committee, and Rabbi A. James Rudin, assistant director, sent a telegram to John M. Allen, presiding bishop, today, expressing "deep appreciation for the historic act of respect for Judaism and friendship for the Jewish people."

Denunciation of Revision

Debate in the House of Bishops continued throughout the morning and afternoon with attention to small details and the mild tone that contrasted with the more lively debate that had preceded approval of women's ordination last week.

Debate on the book at a hearing earlier in the convention had been more heated. Renouncing the 1,001-page revision as a "rash march to St. Paul's," a deputy from Huntington, La., said of the provision for alternative rights including passages from the 1928 version, presented the possibility of so many different combinations that "you could go to church every Sunday for the rest of your life and hear different liturgy each time."

Someone complained about a "dishonest" change in the Nicene Creed in which "visible and invisible" becomes "seen and unseen."

And someone declared that the new book "plays around with theology," "mongrelizing the English language" and is "littered with trite expressions."

Presentation of Message Scored

Critics of the traditional book contend that it has been revered for its style at the expense of its message, and that 18th century language at times unintelligible or misleading to the contemporary reader.

Defending the modernized version, Canon Charles M. Guilbert said the other day, "Words don't stay still. They change. They lose meanings or get spread out and become thin." The word "substance," for example, once had spiritual connotations and now suggested "as C.S. Lewis said, nothing more than a big bowl of tapioca," continued Canon Guilbert, who is custodian of the prayer book.

"My dear friend W. H. Auden once said you can't speak in high style in the 20th century," recalled Canon Guilbert. "He should have known better; he did it himself." The new book, he contended, contains "rich, vibrant, elevating, evocative, poetic language."

The prayer book is of major concern in the Episcopal Church and among the other members of the worldwide Anglican Communion, which places great importance on liturgical form. Various members of the Communion now use various versions of the book.

The First Book of Common Prayer was translated and written in 1549 by Thomas Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury, at the request of Henry VIII. However, scriptural passages of that edition were taken from the Great Bible then in use, translated in the 1530's.

There were revisions over the centuries, though none as sweeping as the one approved today. The First American Prayer book was issued in 1789 and updated in 1892 and 1928.

The current revision began 12 years ago. Parts of the draft revision had been authorized for trial use during the past nine years, and it was during this period that the controversy simmered. The Standing Liturgical Commission said it considered thousands of suggestions, corrections and denunciations sent in by lay people and clergy during that time.

Once the new book is approved here, no more changes will be made in this version.

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM IS SCORED BY REAGAN

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 20 (UPI) — To Ronald Reagan, the most important debate this election year is not between the two major Presidential candidates but over the Democratic and Republican platforms.

"A party platform is an actual guide to the course a party will take once it comes to power," Mr. Reagan said last night in a 30-minute televised broadcast paid for by the Republican National Committee.

"The Democratic platform," he said, charts the most dangerous course for the nation since the Egyptians tried a short cut through the Red Sea."

The former California Governor who narrowly lost the Republican Presidential nomination to President Ford, acknowledged early in the speech that he would rather be participating in the upcoming Presidential debates. But he insisted, "The election of President Ford is of great importance to each of us, to our families and our freedom."

In a veiled reference to the Democratic nominee, Jimmy Carter, Mr. Reagan warned, "It only takes one man in power with the wrong ideas to ruin the nation."

F.B.I.'s Interrogation of Suspect In Bronfman Case Is Challenged

Special to The New York Times
WHITE PLAINS, Sept. 20—An agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation questioning today to establishing his point that the F.B.I. was aware that he had been retained as Mr. Byrne's lawyer and that agents did not stop questioning his client.

An F.B.I. agent, James Ingram, during cross-examination by Mr. DeBlasio, said that he answered the lawyer's call to F.B.I. headquarters in Manhattan shortly after 2 P.M. on Aug. 17.

Mr. DeBlasio made the call from somewhere in northern New England, although it was not made clear in testimony from what state.

About the time Mr. Ingram received the call, Mr. Byrne was being questioned by two agents, Myron R. Fuller and Robert McGonigal and two assistant United States attorneys, Gerald Petter and Lawrence Pedowitz.

Mr. Ingram recalled that he referred Mr. DeBlasio—who had been reached in New England by a member of Mr. Byrne's family—to the United States Attorney's office.

The two Federal prosecutors, Mr. Feffer and Mr. Pedowitz, left the F.B.I. office at about 2:30 P.M., and Mr. Byrne remained with Mr. Fuller and Mr. McGonigal, it was established during testimony.

When Mr. Fuller took the stand, Mr. DeBlasio pressed for details on what information the agents then sought from his client from 2:45 P.M. until 4:30 P.M., when Mr. Byrne was taken from their office to be fingerprinted and photographed.

From another agent, Thomas M. McShane, Mr. DeBlasio drew testimony that Mr. Byrne called his wife, Elizabeth, about 5 P.M. and asked that she get him a lawyer. Shortly after 7 P.M., he signed a typed confession, it was stated.

JUST CRUISE ALONG WITH FLYING COLORS.

Travellers must be content, said Shakespeare in As You Like It. And that's what cruising along with Flying Colors is all about.

We do it with schedules you can depend on, menus that reflect the Good Taste of America, wide-body interior design, 127 glares with ample head, shoulder and hip space, compartments for storage of carry-ons overhead instead of under foot, fold-down center seat backs in coach and in those and more Braniff jets, leather seats in first class.

The whole idea is that you travel relaxed, with a sense of well-being, in happy anticipation of a successful business meeting, a family reunion, a long-awaited visit with a friend, or a well-earned vacation.

That's why you may never want to fly any other way.

Abraham Hirschfeld, who was defeated in the Democratic primary, endorses Senator James L. Buckley at the Robert F. Kennedy school in Manhattan.

Buckley Endorsed by Hirschfeld But He Loses Support of Javits

The Senator himself did not realize all that would be said, it turned out. Mr. Hirschfeld said that Mr. Buckley had agreed with him that holders of political office should not hold governmental office. Mr. Buckley looked startled. As he began to explain his views, Mr. Hirschfeld, who had strolled a few paces away, shouted: "I meant county chairmen."

He meant, it turned out, Mr. Moynihan's campaign coordinator, Joseph F. Crangle, who is Erie County chairman and is on the legislative payroll.

Mr. Buckley cleared his throat. "The matter should be examined carefully," he said.

The news conference had been set up in front of the Kennedy mural, but Mr. Hirschfeld shifted it to another wall that bore a plaque listing the donor. "I'd much rather that we do it right here," he said, "and we'll see who made it possible. This mural was donated by myself."

Moments later he showed copies of the document he had distributed during the primary campaign indicating that Mr. Moynihan had not voted in New York since 1960.

Voting Charges Are Denied

Mr. Moynihan had said previously that this was wrong, and yesterday his press secretary, Richard Stout, repeated the record that he had issued earlier: that Mr. Moynihan had voted in the New York City general elections of 1962, 1964 and 1965. In 1968, according to Mr. Stout, Mr. Moynihan shifted his registration to Cambridge, Mass., where he was a Harvard professor. In 1975 he reregistered in New York State, at his home in Oneonta.

Mr. Javits, in a press conference in his Manhattan office, began by reading and improvising on a two-page news release praising President Ford for his "coolness" in crisis and his integrity, while criticizing the Democratic nominee, Jimmy Carter, for apparent waffling on issues. At the end, the Senator added, almost as an afterthought:

"I shall not be campaigning on the state level for Senator Buckley."

Responding to questions, Mr. Javits said that he was not yet sure that he would vote for Mr. Buckley. He said he would make up his mind and make it known publicly before November.

The problem had not arisen previously for Mr. Javits. When Mr. Buckley was elected in 1970, he had only the Conservative Party line, slipping to victory between two liberals—Charles E. Goodell, who had the Republican and Liberal lines and Mr. Javits's support; and Richard L. Ottinger, the Democrat.

Mr. Javits said that he could not support Mr. Buckley because of his ties to the Conservative Party, which he said was being used to "move the Republican Party in a way inimical to the party's best interest."

He also cited Mr. Buckley's early opposition to Federal aid for New York City at the height of the fiscal crisis and his role as a potential Presidential contender during the Republican National Convention.

Mr. Moynihan and the Democrat he defeated by 1 percent of the total vote in the primary, Representative Bella S. Abzug, shared the speaker's platform yesterday in Pennsylvania Station at the start of a whistle-stop tour by Mr. Carter. Later Mr. Moynihan headed for Chicago to speak at a State of Israel Bonds dinner.

Crash Kills 2 on Motorcycle

MILLBURN, N. J., Sept. 20 (AP)—A motorcyclist and his passenger were killed yesterday in a collision with two cars in South Mountain Reservation here, the police said. The victims were identified as Malcolm F. Taylor, 25 years old, of Morris Plains and Renee Niepelsky, 22, of Montclair. Mr. Taylor collided head-on with a car, and the force of the collision propelled the motorcycle into an auto driving behind it, the police said.

Baldwin pianos fresh from Tanglewood are now on sale.

Every year we hold a sale of Baldwin pianos used by student and artists of the Tanglewood festival. And this year the festival are even greater because we also have a sale of instruments prestigiously used this summer at Long Island's Usdan Center for the Performing Arts.

The magic of talented fingers may or may not rub off on the instruments, but it certainly rubs off some of the price. And you can also save on a piano that never left town.

Because in honor of the festival, we're reducing prices on nearly all our pianos.

We also offer savings on trade-ins, discontinued models, brand new, fully warranted, and "factory specials," authorized for sale at very special prices.

So if you visit our factory-owned stores and look over our vast collection, you're bound to find an instrument that suits your taste and means.

Financing directly with Baldwin makes it easy.

But please hurry. Because the festival at our stores ends October 9.

Harlem Muslim Admits If Has Been Indicted or Credit-Card Theft

MARLAYNE HUNTER, prosecution witness in the case of a black Muslim accused of a policeman at a Harlem mosque testified yesterday that two separate indictments may involve credit cards.

...cross-examination by a lawyer for the defense, Thomas also acknowledged about his salary on applications for credit cards that he was heavily in debt.

...former Muslim, testified he has been a paid agent of the State Department since March 1972.

...State Supreme Court, 100 involves the shooting death of a man during a melee at Muhammad No. 7, 116th Street at 10, on April 14, 1972, when someone there by an emergency source of the call is still unidentified by witnesses.

...ant in the case is Lewis 17X, 34-year-old, whom Mr. Thomas said was the man who had been at the mosque that day. Thomas said that he had seen Mr. Thomas a teacher and dean at the "Ying" with Officer Phillips trying to get the pistol out of his holster.

...sings he shot the cop," Mr. Thomas said during direct examination. District Attorney James J. Conboy said that the defense attempted to establish the reliability of the 34-year-old by pointing up his involvement in forged forgeries and stolen credit cards as well as alleged inconsistencies in his testimony.

...indictment against Mr. Thomas in Criminal Court in Manhattan, dated June 22, 1973, returned from $322 in purchasing June and July 1973 department store in the credit card issued to Arlin Thomas.

...to the Charges

...examination by Mr. Elmer Thomas who had been an attorney for the Muslim sect. He was "holding the credit card that period," but he denied using it. He said that he did not use it.

...indictment involved the use of a credit card belonging to Abraham Thomas, Beverly, according to Thomas, asked him to sign for it.

...is said that he was not aware of the card had reported the card that he had not represented Mr. Wilson.

...testimony in the crowded courtroom that on applications for a credit card and a car loan, both of which Mr. Thomas had listed his salary as $10,000, in fact, he was making money in Muslim enterprises.

...is also acknowledged that he had been by the bank for failure to pay a Master Charge balance and approximately the same time his credit card was assessed for failure to pay a $1,716 on the note.

of Elections Begin Canvass Primaries Vote

...outcome of at least three primaries still in doubt, the canvassing today begins the official of the city's 5,500 voting machines that, barring the able suits by defeated candidates, will be in place between now and Oct. 8.

...at 9 o'clock this morning, the eight warehouses where the machines are stored will check the machines against the paper that were prepared—hastily and sloppily—in the polling stations.

...uncommon to find transposed numbers, which, however, could change the outcome in three of the races. In one of these races, a Democratic primary in the 11th District on the West Side, an, two voting machines counted 100 votes each were not counted on election night.

...w Law Slows Canvass

...cial canvass is slower than last year because, under a new law, voters whose registrations are not on file at the polling station are not allowed to fill out a paper ballot without a sworn statement that they are registered to vote.

...statements must then be checked against original records before the ballots can be counted. This will take until Sept. 29, but the machines will be opened first in the contested races.

...w, voters whose credentials were not immediately checked before they decided on the spot whether to vote.

...other close primaries were in the 34th District in upper Manhattan and the 34th District in Queens, Assemblyman Joseph F. Lissa was defeated by 17 votes.

...arty Petitions Challenged

...Y, Sept. 20 (UPI)—Notice of a petition to Independence Party Presidential primary in Queens was filed today with the State Board of Elections. Mr. McCarthy filed with 27,000 signatures, 7000 more than the maximum.

...spokesman said that the papers raised "general objections" and that the board would have six days to rule on the objections.

New York Felony Arrests Rise 6% Despite Cut in City's Police Force

"screening discretionary arrests more carefully." These arrests, he explained, often involve disputes between family members and relatively minor offenses, such as loitering.

"Our main concern is keeping men on patrol for major crimes and supervisors have to ask whether it is worth taking a man off patrol for a minor incident that can be resolved without our intervention," the official said. "Maybe we should have done this a long time ago. It's better management."

Unpublished Police Department data obtained by The New York Times showed that in the first six months of this year 55,134 persons were arrested on felony charges compared with 52,117 in the same period last year—an increase of 5.8 percent. Felonies include murder, rape, robbery, assault, burglary and auto theft.

But, overall police arrests in all categories—felonies, misdemeanors, violations, traffic infractions and suspects wanted by police departments in other cities or other law enforcement agencies—dropped 6.7 percent. Through last June, 117,449 persons were arrested for felonies and petty crimes, compared with 125,860 in the first six months of 1975.

Some of the Findings

The statistics also contained these key findings:

- Arrests for misdemeanors, or crimes calling for a prison term of less than one year, decreased to 42,905 from 42,981, or 0.2 percent.
- The largest decline—almost 50 percent—involved "violations," a category covering the lowest grade of offenses, including unlicensed peddling, loitering, harassing an officer or disorderly conduct. Many prostitution arrests often are reduced to violations, or a maximum jail term of 15 days.
- A 13.2 percent drop occurred in arrests for other police departments. These

	1976	1975	Percent of Change
Felonies	55,134	52,117	+ 5.8
Misdemeanors	42,905	42,981	- 0.2
Violations	15,629	26,439	- 40.9
Traffic infractions	74	52	+ 42.3

arrests fell to 3,707 from 4,271, apparently reflecting a reluctance by the police here to commit personnel to such assignments.

Parking violation tickets given by officers decreased to 2,156,558 from 2,228,103, or 3.2 percent, however, summonses for moving violations increased 2.1 percent—to 439,568 from 430,569 the previous year.

Since the onset of the city's financial crisis in the spring of 1975, police strength has been cut through layoffs and attrition to 26,000 from more than 31,000.

This year the crime rate for the first six months has risen 18.5 percent, with most of the increase involving property crimes, such as burglary and auto theft.

When the personnel cuts began last year, there were private warnings by police officials and public declarations by the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association that the arrest rate for serious crimes might decrease sharply. These fears have not been borne out by the latest statistics.

Rise in Veterans' Benefits Voted

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20 (UPI)—The Senate approved legislation today that would provide an 8 percent cost-of-living increase in veterans' disability compensation. The increase would go to about 2.6 million disabled veterans and 370,000 survivors of veterans killed on active duty. The estimated cost is $189 million.

Why wait up to 90 days to earn 5 1/4% interest

In 90 days, County Federal can pay you 5 3/4%!

County Federal Savings and Loan pays interest on your savings every month — on all accounts, passbook or savings certificate. So you never have to wait up to 90 days to enjoy the interest you've earned.

If you now have a passbook account that requires you to wait till the end of a quarter, County Federal suggests you consider the advantages of a County Federal 90-day Savings Certificate. You can earn 5 1/4% interest on your savings instead of the 5 1/4% (or perhaps 5%) you now receive. You don't have to tie your money up for a long period of time, because your funds are available to you without any interest penalty every 90 days. (Renewal of your certificate can be made automatic, subject to your approval.)

With a County Federal 90-day Certificate, your savings not only earn a higher rate but your interest is compounded daily. And you can draw your interest every month — or leave it in your account to earn more interest. If your savings and interest remain in your account a full year, your effective annual yield is actually 6%!

Increase the interest you now get every quarter with a County Federal 90-day Savings Certificate. Minimum deposit — $500.

NOTE: Government regulations require a substantial interest penalty for early withdrawals from Time Savings Accounts. Interest on the amount withdrawn may not exceed the passbook rate, and interest for 90 days is forfeited.

THIS SUIT AT FINE STORE NATIONWIDE $260 AT THE NEW MANUFACTURER $149

Less than one year ago, Saint Laurie, a five men's clothing manufacturer, 68 years, introduced a unique selling concept in New York.

What started as a gratifying response, has built into an ever-growing legion of extraordinarily dressed, happy believers.

The concept is simple: Saint Laurie sells their exquisitely tailored class American and European cut suits in most expensive stores throughout the country.

They will continue to sell to stores in New York, but not under the Saint Laurie label, and offer their vast collection (over 25,000 suits) direct to the consumer.

Nothing like Saint Laurie exists in New York. To our knowledge, anywhere.

The enormous selection, impeccable tailoring, costliest fabrics with prices at the factory ranging from $120 to $210, forms the most critical shop into a delighted customer.

If shopping suits are important to your business or personal life and you're spending $275 to $300 for the at better stores, come to Saint Laurie and see what feeling and looking go all about.

Democratic Presidential Drive in New York Is Closely Knit to the State Party for the First Time Since 1964

FRANK LYNN
 In 12 years, the presidential campaign in New York has been fully integrated with the party and local Democrats for Congress and the move that is likely to bring that character to the presidential campaigns in the

and, in effect, his New York campaign— at Pennsylvania Station yesterday morning.
 Mr. Doherty acknowledged that Mr. Carter was running only slightly ahead of President Ford in New York, but said, "It will get closer."
 "If we do our job," he added, "it will open up again."
Primary Loss Helped
 There has been criticism that the Carter effort in the state has been slow getting off the ground. But Mr. Doherty countered that it took time to set up a campaign carefully and that he had been handicapped by a desire to avoid involvement in the race for the Democratic Senate nomination. "Having been in more fights than Joe Louis, I didn't want another one," he said.
 Several factors have contributed to the unusual campaign unity. Mr. Carter, a new face on the national scene, had a thin political organization in New York in the April Presidential primary and thus would have had to build an organization from the ground up.

 He also ran fourth in the primary and, therefore, did not antagonize too many New York Democrats.
 "Our trouble in New York was that we won the primary," said Prof. Richard C. Wade, who headed the George McGovern effort in the state in 1972. "We beat 82 county chairmen." He added, "Carter's great asset is that he ran fourth."
 The final spur to an integrated campaign is money—or the lack of it. The national Carter campaign has allocated only about $270,000 for the New York campaign, exclusive of advertising and polling costs, which are paid by the national Carter organization in Atlanta.

 Under the new campaign finance law, the two major Presidential candidates receive nearly $25 million each in Federal funds, but private fund-raising and spending are severely restricted.
Veteran Campaigner
 Much of the $270,000 will go for the modest salaries of at least 40 paid workers in Carter headquarters at 730 Fifth Avenue. Their salaries, Mr. Doherty said, range from about $300 a week to $50 a week. "Everybody gets a pass to McDonald's," he said with just a trace of a smile and more than a trace of a Boston accent.
 Mr. Doherty, a professional former Democratic state chairman and legislator in Massachusetts, in effect superseded—although he describes himself as a technician—William J. vanden Heuvel and Margaret Costanza, the co-chairmen of the Carter primary campaign in the state. Both are still heavily involved and still retain their titles, but Mr. Doherty is viewed as "the boss" by New York Democratic leaders.

 A veteran of various Kennedy campaigns—he ran Senator Edward M. Kennedy's first Senate campaign, in 1962—Mr. Doherty was recommended to the Carter camp by a friend. His Catholicism, his regular Democratic status and his connection with the Kennedy's give him a headstart among many leading Democrats who are somewhat skeptical of Mr. Carter, the relatively unknown Southerner.
 Mr. Doherty has already got in touch with almost all the state's county chairmen and Congressmen and many legislators to coordinate the Carter drive and local campaigns.

 In addition, six women run a sunny "boiler room" on the 10th floor at 720 Fifth Avenue. Each keeps in contact with the political leaders and public officials in 25 Assembly Districts. About three-quarters of the personnel at Carter headquarters are women, many of them volunteers.
 Borough President Donald R. Manes of Queens, who is emerging as a perennial campaign manager, will coordinate the Carter effort with the city's five Democratic organizations. Mr. Manes, who is also the Queens Democratic chairman, ran the Senator Henry M. Jackson Presidential campaign in the state earlier this year.

Trip From New York to Pittsburgh Is Marked by Laughs, Rain and Faulty Microphones

By JAMES T. WOOTEN
Special to The New York Times

ALTOONA, Pa., Sept. 20—When Izzy Mischel blew a kazoo in his face in New York, Jimmy Carter laughed.

When a helicopter's noise drowned out his words in Philadelphia, Jimmy Carter grinned.

When the microphones malfunctioned a couple of times, Jimmy Carter smiled. But when it started to rain on his speech in Harrisburg, Jimmy Carter sighed—an extended, chest-heaving, exasperated exhalation.

It was all in a long day's work for the Presidential candidate from Georgia as he and a trainload of other Democrats jostled their way through three Eastern states today and into their party's past.

Billed as "the Democratic Whistlestop," the retracing of Harry S. Truman's 1948 railroad campaign took Mr. Carter from Pennsylvania Station in New York City, through New Jersey to Philadelphia, then west to this city and on to Pittsburgh where he flew home to Georgia to prepare for his debate with President Ford on Thursday.

It was also an intensification of Mr. Carter's nostalgia campaign. At every stop along the way, he focused on Presidents past—an honor roll of Democrats, a rogues gallery of Republicans—and offered himself to cordial crowds as a candidate steeped in and evolved from the finest traditions of his own party.

First Leg of His Journey

But his travels today on the 14-car train, which attracted politicians like a commuter local at rush hour, were only the first leg of an elaborately extensive, two-day, 1,600-mile journey to be joined tomorrow by his Vice-Presidential runningmate, Senator Walter F. Mondale, and Mr. Carter's wife, Rosalynn. With stops in Ohio and Indiana, the train was scheduled to wind up in Chicago tomorrow evening.

"Lord, I'm happy about this," Robert Staggs, the party's national chairman, said as the train sped toward Philadelphia from Trenton, N.J. "It's been one of my dreams for a long time."

The trip began before dawn in New York City with Mayor Beane and Governor Carey at his side for a rally in Pennsylvania Station, beneath Madison Square Garden where Mr. Carter won the Democratic nomination two months ago. Standing on the observation deck of a specially built railroad car, the nominee posed for pictures and waved goodbye as the train moved out of the station.

In Newark, Mr. Carter was welcomed to a stage outside the station by Mr. Mischel, a kazoo playing master of ceremonies who improvised lyrics to "Hello Dolly" and finished with a flourish directly in front of Mr. Carter's face.

Pupil Promotes His Candidacy

His speech there was a promise of things to come. Again and again, he focused on Mr. Truman and the record of the Democratic Party as an institution intimately related to "the people." Again and again, he sketched the history of the Republicans as a party committed to special interests, big business and the wealthy.

An hour later, in Trenton, New Jersey's capital, another sizable crowd gathered at the station to hear the same speech. Mr. Carter made his way down the train, shaking hands with many of the guests, chatting with reporters and saying he was entirely pleased with the trip.

None of his aides would say when.

present. Leslie Hurrig, a 9-year-old student at Samuel Compers Elementary School, held a sign in the front row which endorsed Mr. Carter for "President of the U.S.A." but added a promotion of her own candidacy: "Leslie for President of Room 104."

Philadelphia police arrested an unidentified man when he refused to come down from the top of a car. He was searched, handcuffed and locked inside a police van as Mr. Carter continued speaking. Overhead, a helicopter chartered by the Gerald R. Ford advertising agency—Mr. Carter's only advertising firm since he entered politics 10 years ago—clattered noisily overhead, making it difficult and sometimes impossible to understand the former Governor's words.

But once again, as he had in his previous stops, Mr. Carter raised the name of Richard M. Nixon, and his audience responded with lusty booing.

The Democratic candidate and the party chairman spent their time between stops in the last car of the train. Its walnut-paneled interior provided couches and comfortable chairs, a ship's clock and barometer, and a digital speedometer which indicated at one point that the train was exceeding speeds of 80-miles-an-hour.

Largest Crowd at Harrisburg

It was not precisely Mr. Carter's country. As the train emerged from the tunnel beneath the Hudson River, it sped into the Jersey flats, past stacks of old automobiles flattened. Through Trenton and into Philadelphia, the scene outside Mr. Carter's car was that of the Eastern megalopolis—a long, unending succession of row houses, old factories, littered streets.

When the train left Overbrook, it headed west on Philadelphia's main line. The largest crowd of the day was waiting for Mr. Carter in front of the State Capitol in Harrisburg. There were five high school bands, and Gov. Milton P. Shapp, who had removed his pin-striped engineers cap for his appearance on the capitol steps, had brought together a blend of state employees, labor union leaders and members and school children to talking all east 5,000 people, according to local police estimates. Some of them leaned from the windows of a 12-story state office building overlooking the street in front of the capitol and Mr. Carter's lengthy motorcade arrived from the Harrisburg station.

Speech Blurred by microphones

The microphones on the lecture malfunctioned and much of Mr. Carter's speech could not be heard by those who gathered.

Mr. Carter was obviously bothered by all this, including a light rain that began to fall as he spoke, and he seemed to hurry his standard stump speech.

Words ran together in an often unintelligible fashion and some of his aides seemed quite disappointed.

Nevertheless, as the train neared this little city, built by the Pennsylvania Railroad in the early part of this century, Mr. Carter made his way down the train, shaking hands with many of the guests, chatting with reporters and saying he was entirely pleased with the trip.

"I may do this again, sometime," he said.

None of his aides would say when.

Carter, in Early Stop at Trenton: Cheers, Jeers and Jersey Peaches

By MOLLY IVINS
Special to The New York Times

TRENTON, Sept. 20—Enthusiasm at 8 o'clock on a Monday morning in downtown Trenton is a contradiction in terms.

Nevertheless, Mercer County Volunteers for Carter were out pushing leaflets. "Historic Appearance!" the leaflets trumpeted: Jimmy Carter in Trenton, N.J.

The first to arrive for the Carter stop at the train station were the drunks and the kids playing hooky. The drunks, when approached by a reporter, straightened up and made an effort to discuss politics. "She's a Democrat," offered one of them, with the air of one who had been initiated into great mysteries.

It was not as though the Volunteers had not been working. They found out only last Thursday that Mr. Carter was coming, explained a female volunteer. And ever since they had been out leafletting shopping centers, colleges, theaters, factories and apartment complexes. They had also put announcements on the radio.

But the people who showed up at the train station kept saying they had read about it in the paper—some article in the back pages gave Mr. Carter's schedule in tiny type.

Unemployed Show Up

Who comes out for a whistle stop at 9:15 A.M. on a Monday in Trenton, a city of 175,000, 63 percent black, where almost everybody who works works for the state? The unemployed showed up shortly after the drunks: Trenton supposedly has the lowest unemployment rate in the state—8 percent. But you could not tell that by the men from the carpenters' union, Local 1489.

David Hadlund, business representative for the local, said that of the 350 outside carpenters in the local, only 55 are now working. "Sewage moratoriums, high interest rates—it's killing us. We've got guys laid off 10, 11 months between jobs. This never happened to us before."

Charles Leavelle, a carpenter who has been unemployed for the last nine months, was there with his sign, "We Want Jobs, Not Promises." Members of the iron workers' union, Local 68, appeared. Then members of the operating engineers' union, and others from the building and trades union.

Next came the anti-abortionists. They came from all over New Jersey, about 60 of them, with their posters of aborted fetuses that read, "Give Life a Chance."

Hope to Change Stand

They were there because Right to Life newsletters had urged members to picket Mr. Carter, "whenever he showed up in Philadelphia. And they were there just to be against the Democratic nominee, explained a woman from Hightstown, but because they hope to change his mind.

"We're just tired of keeping silent about this issue," she said. A Carter Volunteer tried valiantly to explain to them that Mr. Carter does not favor abortion. It was no use.

"Keep the Bishops out of Politics," read the sign of a counterdemonstrator.

Trenton is in Mercer County and Mercer County happens to have a rather powerful Democratic organization. Representative Frank Thompson Jr. of Trenton sort of heads it up, and State Senator Joseph Merlino holds not inconsiderable power therein. So state, county and city employees were given time off to come to the rally. Not really time off—they would have to make up the hour with shortened lunches and coffee breaks for the rest of this week.

Observers estimated the total crowd at more than 1,000, although some local Carter campaign people put it at more than 2,000.

A Mother Was Curious

Mrs. Dora Thomas kept her son, Delrick, 12 years old, out of school so he could see Mr. Carter. She said she was just curious and wanted Delrick to see the man.

The Mercer County Carter campaign has put major emphasis on voter registration. There are high school pupils who go out two or three nights a week. They have registered 300 people in the last 10 days, according to Stuart Goldstein, one of their coordinators. They work door-to-door, and cheerfully register even those who say they are Republicans. Mr. Goldstein said.

Trabi Falls In

Finally, the Carter train pulled in. Huzzah, hooray. Actually, the crowd did not hear much until the Carter campaign people, strategically scattered in pairs, started shouting "We want Carter! We want Carter!"

First came Robert Strauss, chairman of the Democratic Party. Then Gov. Brendan Byrne of New Jersey, who was followed by the Rev. S. Howard Woodson, former speaker of the New Jersey House, who introduced the Rev. Martin Luther King Sr. and Coretta Scott King, the father and the widow of Dr. King Jr. The older King and Dr. King's son were traveling with Mr. Carter.

Then came Jimmy Carter, and when he had finished speaking there were more plugs for the registration drive. The crowd would have drifted away if it had not been promised some genuine Georgia peaches after the rally.

The peaches, upon investigation, turned out not to be from Georgia but from Hamilton, N.J.

come, and anything above that would be higher, and anything below that would be lower.

Despite Mr. Carter's assertion that it was a distortion to do so, Robert J. Dole of Kansas, Mr. Ford's running mate, and several Administration officials had noted that median income in 1974 was $12,836 and said that Mr. Carter thus was advocating tax increases for everyone with an income above that level.

"The tax revision issue seemed likely to become a focal point of the first Ford-Carter debate, scheduled to take place Thursday night in Philadelphia.

The President, rather than wait for the direct confrontation, arranged to raise his interpretation of Mr. Carter's remarks at the Rose Garden reception for participants in the National Conference of Farm Credit Banks.

He hailed agriculture as "the most productive segment of our total society," said that it had been his "pressure on the Congress" that had led to legislation more than doubling the size of a farm or small business estate exempt from inheritance taxes, and then said that "We have to do something affirmatively about our personal income taxes."

The President said he was persisting in proposals to increase, from $750 to a new level of $1,000, the individual income tax exemption "because our middle-income taxpayers have been short-changed over the last 10 years."

Defining Middle-Income

Mr. Ford said his tax revision plans are intended to benefit those with incomes ranging from $8,000 to $30,000 a year, which he classified as "middle income." Fewer than 10 percent of American families have incomes above $25,000, however, and not more than 5 percent earn more than $30,000 a year.

Ron Nessen, the White House spokesman, declined at a news briefing to respond to questions dealing with Mr. Carter's belated explanation that he would not raise taxes of middle-income families. Mr. Nessen said his policy was to decline to answer Democratic political rhetoric.

When it was pointed out that Mr. Nessen had said Saturday, though, that Mr. Carter's tax revision remarks were "a major blunder," Mr. Nessen smiled and said, "I think my saying that it was a major blunder was a minor blunder."

The White House also sought to associate Mr. Carter's tax statements with an attempt to lessen the effect of the endorsement last week of the Democratic candidacy by the National Education Association.

To Meet Former Leader

White House officials arranged for Mr. Ford to meet today with James A. Harris, the immediate past president of the organization, and for Mr. Harris, a Republican, to tell reporters that Mr. Carter's policies would "place a far greater portion of the tax burden on the category of income that covers the majority of teachers."

Mr. Harris said he had told the President the N.E.A.'s endorsement had been decided by a canvass of the 9,000 participants in the organization's annual convention and it "should not be misinterpreted as a decision of the 1.8 million members."

By LINDA CHARLT
Special to The New York Times

BINGHAMTON, N.Y., Sept. 20—Walter F. Mondale, the Democratic Presidential nominee, told Carter today in a counterblast to the Republicans on the issue of opposing tax reforming the wealthy.

Mr. Mondale began his critique at a Democratic breakfast in upstate New York, and co-edited a page-and-a-quarter station on his arrival here to speak at the State University.

The Vice-Presidential nominee had talked to Mr. Carter about the Ford A tax-reform record, a subject Mondale, a member of both Budget Committee and Finance Committee, is considered knowledgeable, and most staffers confirmed that it was Mondale that Mr. Carter's controversy stirred by his news agency interview in which the words "middle-income" inadvertently omitted from

Carter Advances on Pennsylvania Station

By CHARLES KAISER

"Is anybody here five foot two?" No one in Pennsylvania Station at 5 o'clock yesterday morning had expected such a question, and when it was asked by Abbe Lowell, an advance man preparing the kickoff of Jimmy Carter's whistle-stop train, his listeners looked confused.

"I'm five foot four," said Cathy Levy, a Carter volunteer.

"Go to the lectern," Mr. Lowell commanded. "And take off your heels."

"Too high," said William Green, an advance man for Mayor Beane. He meant the lectern, not the young woman, and when his boss arrived two hours later for the 6:30 A.M. rally, the 5-foot 2-inch Mayor stood on a six-inch milk crate.

Preparations for the 45-minute event began at 10 P.M. Sunday, when 25 volunteers and six advance men gathered in the station to construct a platform, paste up posters and plastic bunting, build barriers and rehearse Mr. Carter's route.

Someone asked Griff Ellison, a "senior advance person," how you prepare for a rally at 6:30 in the morning.

"You pray," he said.

Others described further steps to try to insure a respectable turnout: For two days, leaflets had been distributed in nearby neighborhoods. Carter volunteers had telephoned supporters and invited labor unions, two bands, four bagpipe players and five cheerleaders.

"Don't Battle the Press"

Anne Edwards, another advance man, was briefing the volunteers. Like Mr. Lowell and Mr. Ellison, she is young (26 years old) efficient and wary of publicity. Advance men are never supposed to receive publicity for themselves, she said.

"Don't ever battle the press," she told her eager volunteers, who ranged in age from 12 to 30. "They're not a security threat to Jimmy. You're here to help them."

Dean Languell and a man who identified himself as "Zappa" were setting up the sound system. They were employees of Phoenix Audio, and Mr. Zappa said they were more accustomed to working at rock concerts than political rallies.

"But this is a pretty good gig," he said. "It gets us back into reality a little bit."

By 6:06 A.M., there were a hundred people at the rally site. Michele Ferraro, a 20-year-old junior from St.

Anne Edwards helps in preparations for the early morning rally.

Abbe Lowell, advance man, assists in setting up stage at Penn Station.

John's University, was there with four other cheerleaders.

"I got up at 3 A.M.," Mrs. Ferraro said. "We practiced our cheers on the subway, in front of everyone."

By the time Robert Strauss, the Democratic national chairman, arrived at 6:30, there were perhaps 1,500 people, Mr. Lowell said.

The television lights preceding Jimmy Carter brought cheers from the crowd, and the cheers brought Mr. Carter down a moving stairway with Governor Carey to the rally.

Beane Is Boored

The moving stairs were supposed to have been turned off. Because they were not, one person was pushed by the throng following the candidate and slightly injured at the bottom of the stairs.

Daniel P. Moynihan, the Democratic nominee for Senate, appeared together with Representative Bella S. Abzug for the first time since he defeated her in the Democratic primary. He introduced her to the crowd as "a valiant Democrat and a great New York lady," and Mrs. Abzug smiled.

Mayor Beane was mildly booed by a crowd that by then included members of the National Maritime Union, the International Ladies Garment Workers Union and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, as well as some early-morning commuters. Most said they had come on their own, by bus or car or subway.

Mr. Carter repeated some of his familiar campaign themes, deplored the New York City unemployment rate and was gone from the platform just 22 minutes after he had arrived. Mr. Strauss was asked if he had been worried about not attracting enough people to such an early rally.

"No, no, we weren't worried," he said. "We draw."

City Councilman Henry J. Stern said, "The perk here was a free ride on the train to Newark. Never have so many struggled so hard for so little—a free ride to Newark."

Jack Cooke, a 15-year-old Carter volunteer, had been stationed on the platform. "It was pretty good," he said. "I met the Governor again, and Pat Moynihan."

"Of course," he added, "I had already met Abe Beane."

of others, and that he was anxious to dispel that feeling.

Mr. Carter said that had he known earlier in life "what I now know" he "would certainly have spoken out more clearly and loudly on the civil rights issue."

Mr. Carter added that he "would have demanded that our nation never get involved in the Vietnam War" and that he would "have told the country in 1972 that Watergate was a much more horrible crime than we thought at the time."

He called his failure to speak out early for a cessation of the Vietnam War and "the fact I didn't crusade at a very early stage for civil rights in the South" examples of personal fallibility.

"These are opportunities overlooked, or maybe they could be characterized as absence of courage," Mr. Carter said.

Mr. Carter also linked President Johnson with former President Nixon as leaders who had engaged in "lying, cheating and distorting the truth." He had not been so censorious of Mr. Johnson in previous statements. Elsewhere in the interview, however, he warmly praised Mr. Johnson's civil rights record and said "there hasn't been another President in our history—with the possible exception of Abraham Lincoln—who did so much to advance the cause of human rights."

Mr. Carter declined to discuss the interview today in any detail, saying he had not read it. However, he expressed no concern about the implications of the interview.

His press secretary, Jody Powell, said the interview gave a "very clear point of the interview was that Mr. Carter was a man who was reluctant to judge others."

"I suspect the fact that it word of two is not going of as much concern to the public as some folks are going to," Mr. Powell said. "I'm in the use of a very word-cast has been considered a sign for office." Mr. Powell said.

Mrs. Carter Comr

NEW YORK, Sept. 20—Carter's wife, Rosalynn, said she had never worried about committing adultery.

Commenting in response about a Playboy magazine by the Democratic Presidential Mrs. Carter said, "I trust it."

In the magazine interview, she said, "I've looked on a lot of just. I've committed adultery many times."

Questioned on television Mrs. Carter said, "Jimmy Carter does not have to explain I have a very close relationship completely. I've never about that. I only heard it about that (adultery) at all."

Senator Robert J. Dole greets guests before addressing the National Rehabilitation Association in Hollywood, Fla.

Dole Makes Emotional Plea to Handicapped in Florida

By CHRISTOPHER LYDON
Special to The New York Times

HOLLYWOOD, Fla., Sept. 20—Senator Robert J. Dole dropped his accustomed tough, tail-gunner tone here today in an emotional moment before the physically handicapped people he called his "community."

"As I stood there on the night of the nomination," said the Republican Vice-Presidential candidate, "I think I felt somewhat like Barbara Jordan at the other convention"—where Representative Jordan, a black Democrat from Texas, gave a celebrated keynote address at the Democratic convention.

"She said the greatest thing about the convention was the fact that she was there in a position of leadership. She had come full cycle; black Americans had come full cycle," Mr. Dole said.

"But I would like to think that when I stood there I might have given hope to someone, some person or some group of persons who had some reservations about whether or not anyone with a handicap can succeed." Senator Dole spent three years recovering from World War II injuries that left him with a limp and withered right arm.

Wants Debate Translated

Senator Dole also said today that he will ask that the projected debate with Senator Walter F. Mondale, the Democratic Vice-Presidential nominee, be translated for simultaneous broadcast in sign language, even if "cynics" say he is exploiting the handicapped. Some said he was doing just that in Kansas City, he admitted, when his nomination was seconded by a blind woman.

"Well, I'll take that criticism, because I wasn't," Mr. Dole said. "I believe in it and I am a part of it. If you have a kidney gone, I have a kidney gone. If you have a problem, I may have some other problem."

Mr. Dole was one of several Republican and Democratic figures in Congress cited here today by the National Rehabilitation Association for stimulating interest in the handicapped.

Though he wept last month when President Ford escorted him to his hometown, Russell, Kan., Mr. Dole is shy about feelings and he reigned himself in with typical Dole humor today. "If you can use me in the next six weeks, use me," he said fervently, and paused. "If you can use me in the next four years, I'd like it better."

Democrats in Oklahoma Voting Today to Choose Nominee for Albert Post

By The Associated Press

The Democratic nomination for the Congressional seat being vacated by the retiring House Speaker, Carl Albert, is at stake today in a runoff election between an Oklahoma state senator and Mr. Albert's longtime chief aide.

In another primary today, in the State of Washington, a former Atomic Energy Commission chief, Dixy Lee Ray, is one of three candidates seeking the Democratic nomination for governor.

In Oklahoma, State Senator Wes Watkins and Charles Ward, Mr. Albert's former top aide, are fighting for the Third Congressional District Democratic nomination to succeed Mr. Albert, who is retiring after 30 years in Congress.

Mr. Watkins led Mr. Ward by about 10,000 votes in the seven-candidate primary on Aug. 25. The winner will face Dr. Gerald Beasley, the Republican nominee, and Jack C. Finley, an independent, in the Nov. 2 general election.

In Oklahoma's Fifth District, Tom Dunlap and Tony Zahn meet in a runoff for the Democratic nomination for the seat being vacated by retiring Representative John Jarman, a Republican. The winner will face Mickey Edwards, a Republican, and four independents.

The Washington primary has been dominated by the race to succeed Gov. Daniel J. Evans, Republican, who is retiring after three consecutive four-year terms.

Dr. Ray, the former A.E.C. chief, has led polls during much of the campaign, but a late poll commissioned by a Seattle newspaper showed her main challenger, Seattle Mayor Wes Uhlman, leading by a slim margin. They are trailed by an environmentalist-lawyer, Marvin Durning.

Henry M. Jackson is virtually assured of Democratic nomination for his fifth term in the United States Senate.

"...we wish to recommend against decision to regulate at this time"

—National Academy of Sciences report on the fluorocarbon/ozone issue, September 13, 1976.

We agree!

In two reports on the effects of fluorocarbons on ozone, the National Academy of Sciences actually made twelve recommendations regarding the uses of these products.

We agree with all twelve.

But the essence of the Academy's present intentions is most clearly stated in its recommendation #6. To prevent misunderstanding which may have arisen in the minds of the public, we reproduce that specific recommendation in its entirety:

"6. In view of the present inadequacies in the bases of our calculations, in view of the reduction in these inadequacies promised by ongoing measurement programs, and in view of the small changes in ozone reductions following from a year or two delay, we wish to recommend against decision to regulate at this time."

Major research is currently under way by government, industry and others to fill the gaps in our knowledge on the fluorocarbon / ozone controversy. Meanwhile, fluorocarbons are vital to products each of us uses every day—air conditioning, refrigeration, and many aerosols.

Science will eventually collect enough information to permit responsible final decisions. But we feel the National Academy of Sciences has been emphatic: there is not sufficient scientific evidence against fluorocarbons to regulate now.

Networks Will Carry Ford-Carter Debate, Despite Reservations About Selection of Members of the Panel

PHILLY WELD
The New York Times
Sept. 20—The three networks, all expressing reservations about arrangements for the debate, agreed to televise the debate between President Ford and Vice President Carter, which had been scheduled for Sept. 20.

Mr. Salant said the league's procedures violated a "basic journalistic ethic that an interview subject may not control who the reporters questioning him or covering him are to be."

The statement appeared to shift the ground on which the network has been carrying on a running dispute with the league. On Friday, when it was first reported that CBS might refuse to take part in the televising of the debate, Mr. Salant sent telegrams to the two candidates asking them to permit the networks to take what are called "cutaway shots" during the debate of the audience that will be on hand in Philadelphia's Walnut Street Theater.

Friday's telegrams made no mention of the process by which the journalists on the panel were being chosen.

Tonight's statement, which appeared to remove any remaining doubts that the debate could be carried on the three commercial networks, mentioned the question of showing the audience as a secondary consideration. In it, Mr. Salant said that by blacking out the theater so that the audience could not be shown, the league was deciding that "some 500 persons must become nonpersons."

Even before Mr. Salant's statement, the league had gone ahead and announced the names of the journalists who had been chosen for roles in the first debate.

It announced that Edwin Newman of NBC would serve as moderator and that the three members of the panel that will question the candidates would be James P. Gannon of The Wall Street Journal, Elizabeth Drew of The New Yorker and Frank Reynolds of ABC News.

Officials of the league, who took part in the selection process, explained that an effort had been made to achieve a balance among newspaper, periodical and broadcasting journalists—and to insure that a woman would be included in the panel.

Mr. Reynolds was apparently included at the last minute after an economics reporter for CBS, George Herman, turned down an invitation to serve on the panel. Reached today, Mr. Herman confirmed that he had been invited to take part but declined to offer any explanation of why he had refused except to say, "It's an internal matter."

It appeared, however, that his refusal was connected to Mr. Salant's dispute with the League of Women Voters. On Friday, the CBS executive told an interviewer that reporters at CBS could decide for themselves whether they wanted to take part in the panel but that he would advise them to decline. He said he thought the league was following questionable procedures in making its choices.

The league had said from the start that the candidates would be consulted in the selection of the panel. In fact, the representatives of the candidates were invited to submit lists of possible panelists and were told that they could propose as many as 15 from three sources—newspapers, periodicals and broadcasting—or a total of 45.

Names were also garnered from other sources, but reporters who appeared on both the Ford and Carter lists were said to have been given special consideration.

"We wanted a panel that would be viewed as fair by each of the candidates," said Charles E. Walker, a high Treasury official in the Nixon Administration who is a co-chairman of the group organizing the debates for the league.

Welcome Aboard ... Space Shuttle Enterprise

Paramount Pictures and the thousands of loyal fans of Star Trek are happy that the United States of America's new space shuttle has been named after Star Trek's starship, The Enterprise. (It's nice to know that sometimes science fiction becomes science fact).

Starship Enterprise will be joining the Space Shuttle Enterprise in its space travels very soon. Early next year, Paramount Pictures begins filming an extraordinary motion picture adventure—STAR TREK.

Now we can look forward to two great space adventures.

'I Have a Dream' Pays Tribute On Stage to Martin Luther King

I HAVE A DREAM, an evening of theater and music based on the words of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., is being staged at the Water Reade Theatres, 17th St. at 5th Ave., through Sept. 27. The play, written by Robert Greenwald, is a tribute to the Rev. Dr. King's "I Have a Dream" speech, which opened last night at the Ambassador Theatre, 215 West 49th St.

By CLIVE BARNES

Montgomery, Selma, Memphis, all that long litany of Southern towns, whose names marked like tombstones the eventual triumph of the Civil Rights movement and the Constitution. The Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., that militant pacifist preacher destined to be a winner of the Nobel Peace Prize and defensibly America's most pertinent martyr. A rifle crack one early April evening in 1968 on the balcony of a Memphis motel. The agony of a nation, the anguish of a people.

That is the subject matter of Robert Greenwald's theater-piece "I Have a Dream," which opened last night at the Ambassador Theatre. It is a measure of Dr. King's martyrdom that in death he has become insensibly a figure of history. And this is not because of the legend of his life—which indeed was legendary—but because in the shortest shadow of his death so much what he died for has, at least nominally, been achieved. Blatant discrimination has been removed, and although equality is yet to be achieved, the basic legal ground rules have definitely been established.

Dr. King, always a realistic visionary, would be the first to admit that there is much to be done. But as he once put it: "We ain't what we are going to be. And we ain't what we want to be. But Thank God! We ain't what we was!"

Mr. Greenwald's evening is not a play about Dr. King, but rather a play about the black leader's writings, speeches and conversations. There is a lot of music—chiefly gospel, but a few spirituals—and the story is taken from Dr. King's first stand in Alabama in December 1955 to his assassination in April 1968.

The evening for memory, recognition and gratitude. It could have been better put together—but the time for a genuine play on Martin Luther King is not yet. We are too close to the events, and the real actors are still alive in the newsreels of our memories.

What we have here is a simple setting by Donald Harris, consisting primarily of suggestions of a home, a cell, a chapel, a pulpit and, yes, of course, a balcony. They were denunciations of Dr. King's life—those and the streets along which he marched.

In an evening where the ultimate outcome is history, and where no opposing dialectic (however misguided) is presented, it is difficult to maintain dramatic tension. Particularly when the cast is merely a hero, his wife and a chorus of four singers. The extent to which Mr. Greenwald succeeds is simply because of the extraordinary eloquence of Dr. King as a speaker.

Dr. King was one of the great public speakers in the English language—in the tradition of politics and clergy, from Donne, Burke, Fox, Lincoln and Churchill. When in to one of his speeches, Dr. King inserts that famous "No man is an island" quotation from one of John Donne's sermons, it slides in without a shudder; in his battle to stir "the appalled silence of the good people, every eloquent known in the book. "Five score years pure literature, with best that only a great ever had dared.

The task of bits alive on stage has Dee Williams and a singing job, domina even ebullient. From Dr. King as a pi man himself was a phlegmatic, more Williams is under concerned with the platform.

For the most part does not try to ing, but in some something of that emerges, and the tongue with pentec Coretta Scott King, with a nice touch enormous dignity, ly effective, and Ramona Brooks, Carroll, Sheila Ellis ter sing their souls.

This is by no even a musical. Real tribute pay to one of the grea our time.

Philharmonic Finds Soviet To Be a Time for Spirited Exchange

By DAVID K. SHIPLER

MOSCOW, Sept. 20. Whether they come here as musicians, scientists, diplomats or just plain tourists, many Americans are developing strong conflicting attitudes about the Russians and Soviet life, feeling simultaneously great attraction and great revulsion.

So it was in the last two weeks as the New York Philharmonic toured Leningrad and Moscow, its members performing, conducting workshops for Soviet students, going on late-night drinking bouts with Soviet musicians, the orchestra flew home over the weekend.

"I can't believe how these people drink," said Renée Siebert, a 26-year-old flutist. It was a remark made with a certain admiration on a night when, for those among the 110 orchestra members who spent time with Soviet musicians and came away with fondness and professional respect for them.

The drinking and talking sessions after concerts were just the sort that gladden hearts in whatever State Department office runs cultural exchanges.

"Half of it was in German, Russian, English—we'd drink and drink," said Gerard Schwarz, a trumpet player. Inevitably, some bonds were formed, addresses exchanged. But at the same time, Mr. Schwarz and others in politics were appalled at the vulnerability of art to politics in the Soviet Union. Mr. Schwarz concluded that Soviet and American societies were so alien to each other in this respect that they could not even be compared. When he came upon another American at lunch, he found himself talking about principles of artistic freedom that he noted were so fundamental to American life that they were normally taken for granted and left undiscussed at home.

It was partly in recognition of these gaps that the Philharmonic management, headed by its managing director, Albert K. Webster, tried to reach Russians by going well beyond the eight public concerts and two open rehearsals on the formal schedule. Aware that seats were largely reserved for those with official connections, Mr. Webster bought tickets for the last two concerts in each city to give free to interested Russians whom he and others encountered. He brought stacks of scores by some of the most interesting contemporary American composers, such as Elliott Carter and John Cage, to distribute to selected Soviet musicians. Such music is too unorthodox for official Soviet taste and is not performed here.

The orchestra also arranged day-time lectures, clinics and workshops for music students at the Leningrad and Moscow Conservatories, a program that reportedly met some resistance from Soviet teachers who apparently did not want their students' failures on display. Some sessions were canceled as a result. But Moscow went on. Erich Leinsdorf ran fascinating workshops in conducting and interpretation, Hanna Lachert, a violinist and Polish émigré who speaks Russian, talked about music in New York. Oboists, flutists, cellists, bassoonists and others split up into their specialties and settled into small rooms with students and professors to listen to one and other play and talk about their instruments.

Some orchestra members emerged from these sessions impressed with the discipline and skill of many of the Soviet students, but equally amazed at their inability, in a society that places such emphasis on music, to get good instruments and accessories in the way of strings, reeds, mouthpieces and the like. The Americans were asked frequently for any extras that they might have along. Stanley Drucker, a clarinetist, gave away some reeds. Mr. Schwarz, during a trumpet workshop, asked if mouthpieces were hard to get here and was assured by a senior professor at the Moscow Conservatory that they were readily available. Afterwards, in the corridor, Mr. Schwarz said, a couple of kids came up and asked me to send them a couple of mouthpieces.

The finest professionals here usually perform with the finest state-owned instruments and often have none of their own. The American musicians discovered, Miss Siebert said that flute students at the Leningrad Conservatory were returning to school after an entire summer vacation with no instruments to play. They had to turn their state-owned flutes back to the conservatory at the end of the school year, getting them again only in September. "And the instruments they're given are wretched," she said.

"But they play well with what

Enrique Batiz of Mexico Leads Concert by American Symphony

By JOHN ROCKWELL

The American Symphony Orchestra concert Sunday evening in Carnegie Hall wasn't an ordinary American Symphony Orchestra concert. The regular series begins Oct. 10.

Instead, this was a rather curious part of Mexico's observance of the United States' Bicentennial. Curious because it consisted of a co-presentation with Carnegie Hall of an American orchestra conducted by Enrique Batiz, who heads the Symphony Orchestra of the State of Mexico.

The soloist was a Venezuelan pianist, Eva Maria Zuk (who is Mrs. Batiz, although the program didn't take note of that fact). The program offered the most standard of non-American, non-Mexican repertoire, except for one piece by Silvestre Revueltas, dedicated to Federico Garcia Lorca a Spaniard. And this came after a two-week tour of Mexico by the same forces.

All of which would have mattered not a whit had the concert been a fine one; unfortunately it was not. Mr. Batiz is a vigorous-looking man and comports himself on the podium with bluntness.

But even after the two-week period of acclimatization, the playing wasn't very refined, technically, and the interpretations weren't subtly shaped.

The principal problem was that Mr. Batiz opted for stately tempos and didn't seem to know how to maintain tension between the loud parts. The result was that the music often went slack, blandly limping to the next unprepared climax.

As a result Beethoven's "Leonore" overture No. 3 and the Mussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition" were simply boring. The Chopin Piano Concerto No. 1 was enlivened just a bit by Miss Zuk, although she too fell victim to the prevailing boneless, watery lyricism.

Revueltas's "Homenaje a Garcia Lorca" was by far the most interesting aspect of the afternoon, partly because it was scored for violins, strings, winds, brass and percussion (including piano). It manages over its three movements and 12 minutes to sound both folkish and fresh, full of ostinato figures for the violins and angular, sweeping melodies for the brass.

Concert: The Cleveland Quartet

By PETER G. DAVIS

A music conservatory is only as good as its faculty, and the University of Rochester's Eastman School of Music is out to prove that its performing instructors are the equal of any by presenting them in a series of concerts this season at Tully Hall, Sunday night.

The Clevelanders, of course, are a well-known quantity hereabouts: these four talented young musicians have frequently played in New York since they first formed their ensemble in 1969. The group's reading of the Ravel Quartet amply demonstrated why they are so highly regarded. It was a beautifully integrated performance, clear in its musical outlines yet shimmering with a feverish intensity that perfectedly mirrored the restless nature of the music. Francis Fursi, viola, joined the Quartet for Mozart's Quintet, K. 593. Although the clarity of the composer's string writing was occasionally blurred here and there, the interpretation was a cultivated one of unusual breadth, lyrical refinement and emotional stability.

Schubert's grandly scaled Octet brought the evening to a conclusion. The performing forces, in addition to the Clevelanders, were Stanley Hasty, clarinet; David van Roosen, bassoon; Verne Reynolds, horn, and James van Demark, double bass.

This is an extraordinarily difficult work to bring off, but on the whole the Eastman ensemble fashioned a superior performance. All eight musicians positively reveled in Schubert's melodic invention, while carefully balancing each instrumental strand into a polished ensemble of rich tonal coloring and smooth-grained sonority.

Paul Taylor Is Disbanding Dance Troupe

By ANNA KISSELGOTT

The Paul Taylor Dance Company, long one of the country's leading modern-dance troupes with an international reputation, has announced that it will disband "indefinitely" because of financial difficulties.

Robert Yesselman, the company's general manager, said yesterday that the sudden cancellation of a South American tour by an Argentine promoter had left the 21-year-old troupe with no incoming funds to meet its current operating costs. In addition, he said, the company, supported by the Paul Taylor Dance Foundation, had a $50,000 deficit as a result of losses in its recent Broadway seasons. The company and Mr. Taylor had received particularly warm acclaim from critics and the public in the last two years, but a disappointing box office in last June's season at the Billy Rose Theater as well as other costs had contributed to the losses.

"The tragedy and the irony of the situation," Mr. Yesselman said, "are that all this comes when Paul is at the height of his creative power and the company is at the height of its creativity."

Mr. Yesselman said that Mr. Taylor could not keep the 12-dancer troupe together because of inadequate funding for overhead costs, such as rent and insurance, as well as rehearsal time.

"Basically, what we need are major sources of support in the area of corporation funding," he said. "In the last six months, we contacted over 120 corporations and corporate foundations with no success. The basic problem is the company has always lived hand to mouth. Before, when the money was coming in on tour, the bills could be covered. But the cancellation of this tour cuts off all income until January. We understand the promoter has gone bankrupt."

Mr. Taylor, 46 years old, announced that he would devote his time to raising funds, and would decline the invitations he has from other companies to stage his works.

Fleetwood Mac Wins Rock Prize
Fleetwood Mac was named group of the year in its album, "Fleetwood Mac," won best-album honors in this year's Rock Music Awards, televised nationally Saturday night. Paul McCartney and Linda Ronstadt were the best male and female vocalists, respectively. The Jefferson Starship's "Miracles" was the top single and Peter Frampton the personality of the year. Best new vocalists were Gary Wright and Natalie Cole.

Chess: Why N-QB3 Has Been Losing Favor in the French Defense

By ROBERT BYRNE

In recent years, the natural move 3 N-QB3 has lost popularity against the French Defense, primarily because it allows the reply 3... B-N5, introducing the extraordinarily complicated Winawer variation, but there are signs that it is ready to make a comeback.

The alternative Tarrasch variation, 3 N-Q2, has not been successful in demonstrating a viable initiative for White; it was tried in seven games of the Anatoly Karpov-Viktor Korchnoi match and all were drawn. Those who want to avoid risk at any cost will probably stick with it despite the tame game it produces.

However, putting the French Defense to the test requires braving the Winawer variation head-on, entering into the sharply unbalanced positions to which it gives rise and fighting it to a finish. In the Manila Interzonal Tournament, Lubomir Kavalek of the United States took on Wolfgang Uhlmann of East Germany, the leading proponent of the Winawer, and won a typically bitter battle.

A Pair of Awkward Pawns

The key exchange 5... BxNch; 6 PxN grants White the bishop pair while producing cumbersome doubled pawns that Black blockades by 10... P-B5. Uhlmann used his queenside superiority to draw first blood with 17... NxBP, but that did not mean that Black had the advantage, since the white QP is invariably sacrificed and, besides, Black would have been able to capitalize on the pawn only in a tranquil end game light years away.

Meanwhile, Kavalek laid siege to the kingside with 15 N-R5 and 20 R-N3, soon bringing his QB into action with 22 B-QR3. The sacrifice could not be taken because 22... NxBP? 23 Q-K1, P-N5; 24 R-N1, PxR; 25 R-N3ch would have won the queen.

Pathway for Victory

Against Kavalek's 27 P-B4, threatening to open pressure on the KB file with 28 P-B5, Uhlmann tried to block the kingside with 27... P-B4, based on 28 R-N, Q-K1; 29 R-NP, Q-N3; 30 RxB, RxB, returning the pawn for a solid position. However, Kavalek entered open lines by 28 PxP.p and 29 P-B5!

Uhlmann attempted to alleviate his hard-pressed position by forcing 31... P-R4, but with 32 BxP and 33 BxN Kavalek achieved even material while obtaining a powerful positional advantage. Kavalek's 34 N-B4 and 35 R-K3 gave him decisive control of the open king file, the corridor into the black formation. Thus Uhlmann was later unable to hinder him from massing power with 42 Q-K2 and 43 R-K1.

UHLMANN/BLACK
KAVALEK/WHITE
Final position

Kavalek's 45 Q-B3 threatened 46 QxPch, consequently forcing the retreat 45... N-N3 and drawing the black king into the open with 46 RxBch, KxR.

Uhlmann had to resign after Kavalek's sharp 47 Q-R5! because he had no way to cope with the threat of 48 QxPch, K-B2; 49 Q-R1. One point is that 47... R-K2; 48 QxPch, K-B2; 49 RxB, QxR; 50 QxNch, KxQ; 51 NxBch gains White a piece. Another is that 47... R-B2; 48 QxPch, K-B2; 49 N-K6ch, K-N1; 50 N-B5, Q-Q1; 51 Q-QB6, R-B3; 52 R-K6, RxB; 53 NxB again wins a piece for White.

Realty-Tax Delinquencies Increase

By EDWARD RANZAL

Uncollected real estate taxes in New York City rose by $35 million during fiscal 1976, which ended last June 30, bringing the total tax delinquency to a new high of $242.6 million, according to Finance Department figures released yesterday.

However, in spite of the sharp increase, Harry S. Tishelman, first deputy finance administrator, said that tax delinquencies were leveling off. He added:

"The increase is very small and much less than the previous year. I think it means we're no longer going downhill."

In 1975, Mr. Tishelman said, tax arrearages climbed by $58 million, apparently as a result of the recession, and represented 7.15 percent of the estimated total real estate value of $2.9 billion. In fiscal 1976, tax delinquencies made up 7.47 percent of the estimated total of $3.3 billion.

In anticipation of uncollected real estate taxes, Mayor Beame, for the first time, established a $324 million reserve in the city's current budget, which should cover the total uncollected amount.

Last week, the City Council passed legislation designed to speed the collection of delinquent real estate taxes and to increase the penalties on the unpaid taxes. The measure also mandated that the city establish a reserve fund for at least 7 1/2 percent of anticipated real estate taxes, to overcome future delinquencies.

Mr. Tishelman said that the latest increase in uncollected taxes showed a slight rise in commercial and office-building delinquencies, and that property abandonments made up only a small part of the $35 million increase in the uncollected taxes.

Donald Kummerfeld, the city's Budget Director, said that the collectable real estate taxes expected under the city's three-year financial plan were "on target."

"We did well, and we are well in the neighborhood of what we are projecting in the financial plan for 1976," Mr. Kummerfeld said.

He added that it might be "risky and erroneous to jump to any conclusions" about the tax figures released yesterday since adjustments under the city's new accounting system had not yet been made.

PANDIT PRAN NATH RAGAS ARE REWARDING CONCERT

Pandit Pran Nath's concerts of morning ragas represent the only opportunity that New Yorkers have to experience an important aspect of Indian music. According to Hindu tradition the morning is a prayerful, meditative time of day, and Pran Nath's concerts, which are being held on Sundays at 10 A.M. at Heiner Friedrich Inc., 141 Wooster Street, often take on the feeling of a devotional service.

Pran Nath is gifted with a deep, commanding voice, and in terms of intonation and fine shading of pitch he is beyond compare. He is a commanding presence as well. When the listener closes his eyes, the effects of the singer's carefully plotted movements between pitches are calming, or even hypnotic. But watching Pran Nath is also rewarding, for he moves his hands and arms with a fluid grace while singing, seeming to sculpt his phrases out of the air. He leaves one with the impression that he is working with solids, rather than sound.

Sometimes Pran Nath seems to materialize his melodies out of near-silence, but on Sunday he was in an outgoing mood. Both his ragas built to soaring conclusions, with the singer unraveling clear skeins of melody and revealing a high register as open and pure as his lower range is rich.

Gromyko, Here for U.N., Planning To Take Up Case of MIG-25 Pilot

Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko of the Soviet Union, on arriving in New York yesterday by air for the United Nations General Assembly, said he would take up the case of the MIG-25 pilot with American officials.

The Soviet minister said "this is an matter that will come up in discussions between us and the United States."

The pilot, Lieut. Viktor I. Belenko, has sought asylum in the United States and is being interrogated by the authorities. George Bush, the Director of Central Intelligence, has called his defection a "major intelligence bonanza."

Bridge: New Season's English Meet Usual High-Stakes

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

Bridge books from England are nearly always of a high standard, and the new season's crop is no exception. The first of them is "Bridge Analysis" by Boris Schapiro, published here by Sterling. This is a 187 page hard-cover, moderately priced at $4.95 and available from The Bridge World, 39 West 94th Street, New York.

The author, a former world champion, has a lively writing style and presents an interesting collection of deals, with the emphasis on play rather than bidding. On the diagrammed deal, he presents an unusual play problem, and the reader should consider how to plan six spades after the lead of the heart king, a suit that West has bid.

The deal occurred in a rubber bridge game, and South rightly proceeded with some caution. The opening heart bid on his right made it clear that there would be problems in the play. But when North followed his vulnerable overcall with two moves toward slam, a cue-bid in hearts and then a cue-bid in clubs, South was entitled to bid six spades.

After the opening heart lead, the declarer recognized that the heart suit offered no hope: East would quickly be in a position to overruff the dummy. The diamond suit offered a chance, since a normal three-three or four-two break could be expected, but dummy was short of entries. There was a solution, however, and South found it.

He ruffed in the dummy, ruffed a low diamond, and drew trumps, discarding the club seven from the dummy. He then finessed the club queen successfully and led diamonds. East won the fourth round of diamonds, but that was

Judge Upholds Award by Jury To Connie Francis in L.I. Rape

A Federal judge in Brooklyn upheld yesterday a jury award of $2.5 million to Connie Francis, the singer, to compensate for her rape in a Long Island motel on Nov. 8, 1974.

But the judge, Thomas C. Platt, ruled that the $150,000 awarded Joseph Garzilli, Miss Francis's husband, was excessive and that his compensation should be cut to $25,000.

Lifting the Female Curse

By ANATOLE BROYARD
THE CURSE: A CULTURAL HISTORY OF MENSTRUATION. By Janice Delaney, Mary Jane Lupton, and Emily Toth. 278 pages. Dutton, $9.95.

If men menstruated, they would probably find a way to brag about it. Most likely, they would regard it as spontaneous ejaculation, an excess of vital spirits. Their cup runneth over, their sexuality supererogates. They would see themselves as "spending" blood in a plentitude of conspicuous waste. Blood, after all, is generally considered a good. "Blood sports" used to be the true test of manhood and at the successful conclusion of a boy's first hunt, he was said to be "blooded."

All this is turned around when it is the woman who bleeds. Bleeding is interpreted as a sign of infirmity, inferiority, uncleanness and irrationality. This "vehement effervescence," as one writer called it, was originally seen as a satanic force powerful enough to disturb the universe. In most primitive tribes, according to "The Curse," women were tabu while menstruating, a tabu so strong that they were kept in seclusion lest they spoil the crops, the hunting and fishing, or the successful prosecution of a war. Nothing, it seems, was too farfetched to blame on menstruation, but why the procreative power of women, as symbolized by menstruation, should have been characterized as destructive rather than creative remains a mystery. The theory that men fear women's "otherness" merely substitutes one question for another.

Terror, however, is better than condescension. In "The Curse," we find women first feared for her menses, then pitied. From Aristotle to Eric Homburger Erlison, woman's menstruation is the badge of her "incompleteness."

Symbolic Castration
For St. Thomas Aquinas, she is "a misbegotten male." Galen, "saw in menstruation an evacuation of the fluids or juices women accumulated in an idle life." In the 17th century, a medical writer called the menses a "vehement effervescence," comparable to wine or beer escaping from a defective barrel. Modern women will not be much happier with Eric Homburger Erlison's opinion that "each menstruation—is a crying to heaven in the mourning over a child." Psychoanalyst Melanie Klein and Helen Deutsch are most likely to infuriate feminists with their reading of menstruation as symbolic castration, a monthly reminder of the forever lost and envied penis.

"The Curse," subtitled "A Cultural History of Menstruation," is the work of three brilliant young English professors: Janice Delaney, Mary Jane Lupton and Emily Toth. In its hardheaded, richly documented concreteness, it is worth a thousand polemics. No man in his right mind can read it and emerge unaffected—especially when he realizes how many of these negative attitudes he is heir to. In "The Curse," we read that higher education was once regarded as particu- larly debilitating to woman because the brain absorbed the blood needed for men- struating. This, of course, did not apply to women working 16 hours a day in a factory, although it was widely believed in the 19th century that "the menstrual cycle" threatens the health of American capitalism because of women's allegedly abject abstinence. Subsequent statistics showed there to be no greater than men's; but the claim originated in what the office called "menstrual politics."

Menstrual politics might be defined as the tactic of keeping women on the defensive and "The Curse" shows this to be one of the most damaging of all misogyn- ous myths. Edgar Bersman, a physician and Democratic party functionary... an- nounced in 1970 that he would not like to see a woman in charge of this country at a time of natural crisis because her "raging hormonal imbalances" would threaten the life and safety of all. The authors of "The Curse" reply that "Thomas Jefferson had periodic mi- graines; Abraham Lincoln had periodic depressions; at least one writer suggested that Richard Nixon's 'raging hormonal imbalances' may have caused the Water- gate episode. Even John F. Kennedy, who did preside over the Cuban missile crisis, had a serious hormonal disorder, Addi- son's Disease (adrenal insufficiency)." "The Curse" also cites a growing body of evidence that suggests that men, too, are subject to cycles, both daily and monthly, during which their psychologi- cal stability and emotional energy vary measurably.

Reason to Rejoice
As one might both hope and expect, the authors of "The Curse" are deter- mined to remove the cultural stigma that may well be more pernicious than any physiological factors. Menarche, or first menses, which is penalized by severe punishment or up to three years' solitary confinement in some primitive tribes, and which still serves as an occasion for mys- tification and embarrassment in ours, should be instead a reason for rejoicing, according to Misses Delaney, Lupton and Toth. If menstruation is natural, then there is nothing in it to be ashamed of.

The last chapter shows what women are doing to free themselves of their apologetic posture in the face of their physiology. While poetry written in celebration of menstruation seems to suffer so far from a certain rhetorical awkward- ness, some of the efforts of visual artists, as described by the authors, are refresh- ingly uninhibited. Especially successful was a "Bleed-In" that they staged them- selves. "For the occasion," they write, "Mary Jane had decorated the bathroom with the signs and symbols of menstra- tion—on the wall was a piece of paper, titled 'Menstrual Graffiti,' on which women wrote such witticisms as 'we all need someone we can bleed on.'" We do indeed; if by bleed we mean to admit our vulnerability and our hu- manity, whether it be male or female.

Remember...

THE CHEERLEADER? THE JOCK? THE GIRL WITH "A REPUTATION"?

They were all part of everyone's high school days. Part of our memories. If you—like most people—wonder how they turned out, you'll be fascinated by What Really Happened to the Class of '65?—a book for everyone who ever went to high school in America.

Armed with tape recorder and their recol- lections, Michael Medved and David Wallechinsky met with 30 of their classmates from Palisades High School, Los Angeles, California—the same high school class that Time magazine focused on for its 1965 cover story on "Today's Teenagers." All of them spoke freely. About themselves. About each other. About experimenting with LSD, sex, and Eastern religions. About seeking enlighten- ment, new meaning for their lives, drifting, learn- ing, and living.

Here's what happened to them. To Lisa, the "bad" girl (425 lovers in two years), now raising her two children alone, trying for a career as a night- club singer. To Brock, voted "Most Popular" at 17, a bewildering suicide at 25. And quiet Jon, a Viet- nam veteran who drinks Coors in the sunlight and talks about the Lebanese prison where he served 18 months for smuggling drugs. And all the others whose hopes, disappointments, and dreams form a remarkable portrait of a generation and of the America in which it came of age.

Some of these young people have made it. Most of them, like most of us, are still working things out. Read about them, and perhaps yourself, in What Really Happened to the Class of '65?

Mr. Carter Toes the Line

Presidential candidates cannot afford and cannot be expected to reject the political support of all those who do not agree completely with them. And yet there are limits to the embraces of expediency. Even by the most relaxed standards of campaign promiscuity, former Governor Carter's Mississippi love feast with Senators James O. Eastland and John C. Stennis stretched the limits of political decency.

The prospect of breaking Mississippi's twenty-year estrangement from Democratic Presidential candidates is, of course, sweet music in the ears of any Democratic contender. In quest of such a prize, Jimmy Carter could hardly be faulted for seeking to normalize relations with the Old South's elder spokesmen, even if this called for such concessions as terming them "statesmen"—an attribute that comes cheap on the hustings. But to describe Messrs. Eastland and Stennis as men with whom it is "a great honor" to be campaigning does little honor to Mr. Carter.

The former Georgia Governor has a creditable record on integration and therefore knows at first hand what it took to overcome the stonewalling bigotry of such men as the two Mississippi Senators. It thus, was an act of political hypocrisy when Mr. Carter implied that the great integration progress that has indeed been made in Mississippi can in part be ascribed to the "courage" of such men as Senators Eastland and Stennis, who were honest enough quickly to disown any credit, recalling instead that they never voted for a civil rights bill in their lives.

"Let me just say one thing about this integration," Senator Stennis said during the reception at the Biloxi airport. "I'm against it, always have been and always will be, but it's a fact. I'm not a fool..."

Sincere? Yes. But hardly a sign of the "courage" responsible for great racial changes in the South. That change was brought about by a brave company of men and women, including a great many Southerners, who worked, fought, bled and even died for a principle. Their victories ought not to be sullied by being mentioned in the same breath with compliments to Senators Eastland and Stennis—not even under the mitigating circumstances of an election campaign.

A Death in Central Park

At about the time the Croatian hijackers were being returned from Paris to New York to answer for their spectacular and fatal misadventure, a crime of considerably less worldwide interest—but with a peculiar viciousness of its own—was being committed against a young woman doing nothing more provocative than walking her dog in broad daylight in Central Park. We wish we could be as confident that the obscure purse-snatchers responsible for the death of Karen Singer will receive as speedy and certain justice as will the hijackers who captured world attention that same day.

Karen Singer, a 25-year-old New Yorker, was leading her pet beagle along the bridge path near East 88th Street at about 5:30 in the afternoon, literally a few feet from the heavily traveled East Drive and a few yards from the even heavier traffic of Fifth Avenue, when she was attacked by two young men who tried to rip away her handbag—later found to contain $5. In the brief struggle, a knife was plunged into Miss Singer's heart; she died a few hours later.

Passersby who saw the incident set up a hue and cry,

Poor Congressional Environment

The 94th Congress will have to display more energy, efficiency and skill in the next ten days than it has shown all session if it is to wind up with an environmental record it can take to the electorate with any pride. Rushing headlong toward an Oct. 2 adjournment, it has yet to resolve major legislative questions concerning—among other matters—air pollution, control over toxic substances, management of the national forests, regulation of strip mining and protection of wetlands.

In the matter of toxic substances, the agreement worked out in a conference committee of both houses is reasonable and would allow the Environmental Protection Agency to impede the marketing of potentially dangerous compounds until they could be tested and their harmlessness proved. The bill should be passed—and in time to force President Ford to take a stand rather than allow him to bury it by a silent pocket veto.

The measure to amend the Clean Air Act of 1970 is in a different category. The House would grossly weaken that law by insisting in conference on the Dingell-Broyhill amendment, which gives the automobile industry until 1982 to achieve emission standards for hydrocarbons and carbon monoxide that, were to have been reached last year and would practically repeal the statutory standards that have been fixed for oxides of nitrogen altogether.

There is still a possibility that this drastically backward step will be erased in conference and that the stronger Senate version will also prevail with respect to preventing the degradation of air where it is still purer than Federal standards require. Far too much time and labor have gone into the Clean Air amendments for anyone to want to see the legislation die now, only to have the whole long process start from scratch with the next Congress. But there are limits to how far a measure can be compromised without being wholly undone.

The same thing may be said of the Nantucket Sound Trust bill, a land-use measure of vital importance to preserving the unique qualities of Martha's Vineyard and chasing the fleeing suspects until one was captured by a police officer. The other was arrested later at his home.

What is especially important in so brutal a crime as this is not only that justice be done, but that it be done speedily. The median lapse of time in this city between indictment and trial for criminal cases is about six months; though that is shorter than it used to be, it is still too long. Particularly in homicide cases, lawyers use every device in the book to delay the trial on the theory that the longer it can be deferred the more blurred the prosecutor's case is likely to become and the greater the chances for a softer sentence or even acquittal.

But justice delayed is justice denied; and if we are going to put an end to the kind of wanton killing that took place in Central Park a few days ago, society is going to have to speed the creaking wheels of the criminal justice system.

End of an Era in Sweden

The voters of Sweden have ended 44 years of rule by the Social Democrats—the longest tenure of uninterrupted power for any party in the world except for the Communists in the Soviet Union. The Scandinavian upheaval, not entirely unexpected, also retires to the opposition benches in the Riksdag the colorful, controversial Olof Palme, still 49 after seven tumultuous years as Prime Minister.

While promising not to dismantle Sweden's extensive social security and welfare system, the winning coalition of three center and moderate right parties attacked Mr. Palme's Government on a broad range of issues: high taxes, increased centralization of political power, a swollen and indifferent bureaucracy, creeping trade-union control of industry and, significantly, the planned expansion of nuclear energy resources.

On the nuclear issue, the campaign witnessed a reversal of the ideological division that often obtains elsewhere on safety and environmental aspects. It was the Socialist Mr. Palme who doggedly defended a plan to build thirteen more atomic reactors by 1985; and it was the Center Party leader and probable new Prime Minister, Thorbjorn Falldin, who promised to kill that program—he said it would risk "the lives of future generations"—and even to close the five nuclear plants now in operation.

Though the Socialists have not nationalized Swedish industries—have indeed given tax breaks to big business—Mr. Palme was assailed for endorsing a plan that would give the unions control within 20 years of all sizable companies. He may have been hurt late in the campaign by allegations that neutral Sweden had secretly bought electronic equipment and even satellite photos from the United States to monitor troop movements in the Soviet bloc. Some Swedes worried over the fact that Mr. Palme had been dependent for survival on Communist votes in the Riksdag.

Mr. Palme is young enough to hope for a comeback; and a spell in opposition could be healthy for him as well as for his party—still Sweden's biggest by a considerable margin.

Forty-four years is a long time in power and it is obvious that even many Swedes who found much to admire in the Social Democratic record felt that it was long enough.

Nantucket from imminently threatened overdevelopment. A reasonable measure has passed the Senate. Severely weakening amendments have been proposed in the House, but it still would be far better to have this bill become law even with these amendments than to have no bill at all.

A bill to authorize funds for construction of water treatment plants would be unarguable if that were all there was to it. A narrowly passed amendment sponsored by Senators Baker of Tennessee and Randolph of West Virginia would somewhat lessen the power of the Army Corps of Engineers to control the dredging and filling of waterways and wetlands. But it would not seriously curtail that power, which the Corps, to its credit, has been conscientiously exercising.

The House version of the bill, however, would destroy that power almost completely—thereby exposing to uncontrolled destruction some two-thirds of the country's invaluable wetlands. If its amendment (sponsored by Representatives Wright of Texas and Breaux of Louisiana) is to prevail, then the bill had far better go down to defeat.

Both houses have produced bills designed primarily to undo a Federal court decision prohibiting further clearcutting in the Monongahela National Forest, feared by the timber industry as a possible nationwide precedent. We would have preferred to see no hasty legislation on the subject; but if there must be a bill at all, the Senate's is far the better of the two. It contains strong provisions to prevent overcutting and to forbid logging on marginal lands, where soil loss is inevitable and reforestation unlikely.

No thanks to the House Rules Committee, there is still a faint chance that a strip-mine regulation bill will emerge once more to plague an Administration which habitually vetoes that long-needed legislation. This year's model of the legislation has been modified to give more time for compliance and otherwise soften the impact on mine owners, but it is still a strong bill. Its last-minute passage would go far to offset an otherwise undistinguished Congressional record in the still politically potent area of environmental protection.

Letters to the Editor

Carter and the Job Issue: Ill-Timed Retreat

To the Editor:
Tom Wicker's Sept. 7 column quite appropriately takes issue with Carter for retreating on the unemployment issue, particularly when, for the third straight month, there has been an increase in unemployment up to 7.9 percent.

Carter's retreat on the unemployment issue is more annoying when an in-depth look is taken at the information supplied by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. At least 21 million workers, or 20.2 percent of the work force, experienced some unemployment during 1975, 2.6 million more than in the preceding twelve months. Long-term unemployment, affecting those workers without jobs for fifteen weeks or more, rose from 8 million in 1974 to 9.2 million, and two-thirds of the increase was among persons unemployed for 27 weeks or more. Household heads were particularly hard hit in that 6.3 million male heads of households were jobless, an increase of 1.1 million since 1974.

In addition to the psychological impact on the unemployed and their families, an estimated $17 billion in jobless aid benefits were paid to 18.6 million laid-off workers, which is about three times the unemployment compensation paid in 1974 and four times what was spent in 1973. Labor Department sources project that the cost will climb to $18.3 billion in 1976. In fact, 38 percent of the resources accumulated in the last forty years by the unemployment compensation trust funds have been distributed in the past three years. The unemployment compensation funds of fifteen states have been depleted and have had to borrow from the Federal Government to meet their obligations. Sixteen additional states may have to go this route this year.

It is a source of amazement that these statistics, which can easily be obtained from the Labor Department and which have received wide circulation as a result of hearings before the House Subcommittee on Unemployment Compensation, have not intensified, rather than diminished, the Democratic standard-bearer's campaign on the unemployment issue.

Questionable Victories

To the Editor:
The Democratic primary election of Sept. 14 illustrated again the inconclusive results when a mere plurality, instead of a majority, serves to produce a "winner." The race for New York's senator was an outstanding example, with Pat Moynihan getting only 36.2 percent of the vote while Bella Abzug got 35.2 percent. No one will know which of these two leaders in a field of five would win a majority if the other three were eliminated. A run-off election would give an indication but is a clumsy, expensive and inadequate method. The use of majority preferential voting, with second and possibly third choices indicated by the voters, would decide that matter conclusively in the initial election.

This would be worth doing even with paper ballots, despite the time required for the counting process; but sophisticated electronic equipment, such as was referred to in The Times on Sept. 13, could be devised to do the job accurately and quickly.

Beside the contest for senator, the table of election results in the metropolitan area given on page 34 of The Times on Sept. 16 reveals nineteen other instances of elections where three or more candidates were involved and no one received a majority. They were three U.S. representatives, two surrogates, two state senators, eleven assemblymen and one city councilman. One Manhattan assemblyman won with only 24.3 percent of the vote; another with only 25.3 percent—both with six opponents.

All of these results are a travesty of the principles of majority rule and effective democracy, especially as an effective remedy is available.

What a Science Court Can Do

To the Editor:
The Times' Aug. 24 editorial on the "Science Court" did not mention the distinction basic to the concept. It is proposed to develop a procedure dedicated to finding the state of scientific fact when such facts are needed for important controversial public policy decisions. The Science Court will not make decisions or even recommendations concerning public actions to be taken in view of the facts it presents.

The proposed procedure is intended to enable non-scientists to make better-informed decisions incorporating their own value systems. It is intended to provide public information complementary to the recommendations of scientific advisers who must share the value systems of public officials to retain their influence.

Actions taken regarding the opportunities and the problems created by the enormous power of science-based technology play a major role in determining our future. In this situation many scientists have become emotionally involved in the impact of their scientific field on society and have become vigorous public advocates for action consistent with their value systems. The disputes that result when inarticulate conflicting values are presented by scientists as though they were scientific facts has produced much public confusion and fear of the unknown, which has compromised our ability to make timely responses to the challenges of a rapidly changing world.

It is proposed to harness the power of scientific advocacy in the Science Court procedure. The best efforts of devoted advocates will be used in substantiating the factual basis of their positions before scientifically trained judges who have no involvement in the field in question, and in the presence of their expert adversaries. An analog of cross-examination will be used to exhibit the weaknesses in claimed scientific factual statements. To conform with the scientific tradition, the procedure will differ from the legal adversary model in many important ways.

As was mentioned in the editorial, such a procedure must be approached with caution. We propose to proceed first by holding a public meeting (see Science, Aug. 30 issue) at which the Science Court and its proposed procedures will be debated. Following this meeting we hope to set up a Science Court experiment to develop its potentialities and to exhibit its problems. The procedure will be conducted in public and the sole authority of the resultant factual output will reside in the credibility of the procedure with the public.

Opinions Without Rights

To the Editor:
In his Sept. 1 Op-Ed article, "Above the Rabble," John Silber argues, correctly I think, that we ought to distinguish between the two principles: Everyone has the right to his own opinion, and everyone's opinion is of equal weight. Silber goes on to argue that, whereas the first is true in any democratic society, the second is false.

I agree with Silber that the second principle is false, but it seems to me that the first, in at least one sense, is also false. We ought equally to distinguish between legal rights and moral rights. It is, of course, true that in any democracy everyone has a legal right to his own opinion, but it seems to me false that everyone has a moral right to his own opinion unless his opinion is the result of reason and the seeking of evidence which will support it.

Someone who has an opinion which he holds simply because he finds it comfortable, or because it is the result of some wild impulse or inspiration but for which he has no evidence, has no moral right to his opinion.

Which Alley for 'Fat Cats' Now?

By Edgar M. Bronfman

During Presidential campaigns, people from the business world are usually referred to — no matter what their actual birth—as "fat cats." Candidates and their managers have always looked toward us lustfully, with a hunger for financial backing steaming in their eyes. Everyone suspected and, after Watergate, everybody knew, that all kinds of favors were bought, jobs bartered and the whole democratic process warped.

Under the reformed campaign law, Presidential candidates are financed by check-offs on Federal income tax returns. No other money, or services of any value, may be directly given to a Presidential campaign. It is a wonderful change. But what does it do to the role of the "fat cat" business leader so accustomed to special clout?

What can his real contribution be now? This November the Government could experience the biggest transformation since 1932: a generationally new, populist President backed by a unified party, a Democratic Congress in both houses under new majority leadership with an entirely new Cabinet and senior bureaucracy.

Many business executives regard this prospect with distinct unease, to say the least. But I believe that this possible watershed election could be a major opportunity for business. With only their wits to contribute, business could seize the chance to create a new relationship between the private sector and Government, an atmosphere in which business might contribute to the change the country needs rather than just witnessing it or fighting it.

There can be little argument that such a new relationship is needed. Business itself has never been held in such disrepute. It is more than coincidence that two of the lowest groups in esteem on the pollsters' totem pole are business leaders and politicians. (Labor leaders also rank abysmally low.) However valid the justifications for the mistrust, business has become increasingly defensive and isolated, talking mainly to itself, with even its valid insights and experiences often ignored by Government and Congress. The biggest loser in this standoff is the American citizen who wants to work usefully to raise his family to that better life which is, and should be, the American dream.

To change that, I believe American business must look to itself, its language of dissent, its corporate behavior and its contribution to the process of government. If business were less self-serving, it would better understand that what is good for America is good for business and not always the other way around. There will always be tension between government and business, just as there is between a free press and the Government. The question is: Can that tension be made useful?

The task for business is formidable. Mistrust is deep. But there are positive signs. Business has responded to the cries of environmentalists, the needs of the deprived, to the aspirations of minorities (including women). To be sure, business often has to be pushed, instead of leading. But in communities across the United States business has formed an indispensable working partnership for local social and economic progress.

What has been accomplished in communities can be done on a national scale. Business can start to re-examine its own behavior. It can form groups and new task forces to make a contribution to national problems like business ethics, hard-core unemployment, further pension security, transportation, taxation, energy and other problems on which business has special knowledge.

The time has passed when business can simply act as custodians of the free-enterprise tradition. The electorate now mistrusts business when we act only as angry guardians of our endangered culture, when we automatically reject every Government initiative and offer little for the public good in its place. We must stop being dragged, kicking and protesting, toward inevitable change and instead take an active and constructive part in it.

A tall order? I am convinced that next January, whether we have the change of a new Administration or the continuation of Republican government, the business contribution to American government can be transformed. Business men and women can, as citizens, join as builders of a society in which—without loss of freedom or incentive—there can be better products, broader justice, deeper and more widespread opportunity for everyone. The executives, their corporations and the Government they help might even start getting some credit for it. But the real profit will go to the American people.

Edgar M. Bronfman is the chairman and chief executive officer of the Seagram Company Ltd. He was one of three hosts (along with Coca-Cola's J. Paul Austin and Henry Ford 2d) who, immediately following the Democratic National Convention, "introduced" Jimmy Carter to 52 prominent United States business executives at a luncheon in New York City.

The Political Bestiary

By Russell Baker

The Ape Man had been restless ever since Jane had insisted on moving to the political jungle. He missed those long evenings on the veld with Simba the Lion. He missed the tree house with its natural cooling. He missed the rapid-transit system which sped him swiftly on vines to his daily work of routing vicious elephant hunters.

The nightly three martinis which preceded dinner in his new split-level clouded his head and, as a man whose English was limited to a few grunted monosyllables, the task of mastering an entirely new bestiary was almost more than he could bear. It irritated him that the king of the political jungle was not Simba the Lion, or Elbert the Elephant, but Gerald the Fordopotamus.

Jane labored patiently to speed his adjustment. Every evening after the martinis, the frozen burgers and the California port, she would say, "All right, we'll take it from the top once more. Who are you?"

And the Ape Man would say, "Me Tarzan."

"And who am I?" "You Jane." "Who are we?" "Me Tarzan. You Jane." "And who is the king of the political jungle?" "Simba the Lion?" "Elbert the Elephant?"

"And very patiently Jane would grind her teeth and say, 'The king of the political jungle is Gerald the Fordopotamus.'"

One evening after this nightly scene Tarzan found new speech. "Tarzan no like Fordopotamus," he said.

Jane was shocked. As Lord Grey-stoke, heir to the aristocratic Grey-stoke grouse estates, she pointed out, Tarzan should be out in the jungle laboring to keep the Fordopotamus from being hoisted out of his mud.

"Fordopotamus like mud?" asked Tarzan.

Jane explained that the Fordopotamus liked things just the way they were. The Fordopotamus did not like to move and did not like anything else to move either, which meant that so long as he was king of the political jungle, there was no danger of having the Greystoke fortune wasted on foolish motion such as the elusive Jimcat proposed.

"Jane mean tomcat," said Tarzan.

"No, Tarzan. All the animals in the political jungle are different. I am talking about the Jimcat."

"How Tarzan tell Jimcat from split-level house cat?" asked the Ape Man.

"The Jimcat is fuzzy about the issues and hard to pin down," said Jane. "Jane crazy," said Tarzan. "Cat not have issues. Have litters."

And Tarzan went to bed in disgust. He was awakened by a reverberation which shook his four-poster. "Goodness," said Jane, "that must be Bob the Doloceros charging the house."

"Rhincoceros bad," said Tarzan.

"But Bob the Doloceros is good," said Jane. "He is only charging the house to get under the Jimcat's skin." Jane and Tarzan looked out the window and saw two creatures. The Doloceros had its horn deeply embedded in the carriage lamp and the other was grinning in at the Ape Man in an awesome display of teeth. Jane was ecstatic.

"It's the Rockedile," she said. "Bob the Doloceros and Nelson the Rockedile are here to tell us how important it is to keep the Fordopotamus from being hoisted out of the mud."

Tarzan opened his throat and uttered his fierce call to summon all the creatures of the jungle. The Rockedile replied with a raised middle finger but his gesture was too late. All the creatures of the jungle, sensing that there was at least one person awake, were already surrounding the area.

Soon Walt the Fritzmunk, Pat the Girinymiraffe, Abe the Beamsadillo and Bella the Abaconda were clamoring for the Ape Man to come out and be stroked. The noise ceased immediately when a glowing set of teeth illuminated the night. It was the Jimcat. Tarzan noted his blue eyes, gentle smile and fuzzy tissues.

"Speak to him, Tarzan," whispered Jane.

Tarzan obeyed. "Me Tarzan," he said.

"Tarzan good," said the Jimcat. "Woman Jane," said Tarzan.

"Jane good," said the Jimcat. "Tarzan good. Everybody good."

"Jimcat crazy," Tarzan whispered to Jane, but he was drowned by a thunderous bray from the mudhole. It came nearer. "Jimcat big spender!" the voice was saying.

"Oh, Tarzan!" cried Jane. "The Fordopotamus is coming right here!" Tarzan raced to the top of the house, seized the television aerial and swung off into the night in search of help. He fell to the concrete sidewalk and was lying unconscious when the Fordopotamus arrived. Being unconscious, he missed the splendid debate among the creatures of the jungle about which of them, after being elected, would provide the finest medical care.

Waiting Room Only

By Harry Schwartz

LONDON—In Clitheroe, a town in Lancashire, there is an unhappy Englishwoman who has been waiting since September 1957 for Britain's National Health Service to provide her with an orthopedic operation.

In the city of Accrington, adults seeking an appointment with a health-service ear, nose and throat specialist were recently being offered appointments for about June 1978—although Accrington children can get appointments to see similar specialists within six months.

These dismaying, if extreme, cases are the first results of a contest the British magazine World Medicine is running to find the National Health Service patient who has waited longest for a needed appointment with a specialist. The point of the contest is to publicize the wide discrepancy between many British communities' needs for medical services and the inadequate resources available to meet those needs.

The British Department of Health and Social Security (London's partial equivalent of Washington's Department of Health, Education and Welfare) has reported that last year the situation got worse, in part because of a widespread doctors' strike. The number of National Health Service hospital inpatients treated in 1975 was the lowest since 1968 and decreased by over 4 percent compared with 1974. The number of patients waiting for admission rose by over 12 percent and was the highest since 1948.

These figures raise the question of what good is a Government's promise of "free medical care" if for many people that care is unavailable when they want it.

No one in Britain denies that this is the situation in this country today, and that the bright hopes of 1948 that the National Health Service could give everyone all the medical care required have proved illusory. Instead, the emphasis is all on the need for rationing medical care, for cutting costs and resources, for deciding better priorities on who should get, and who should be refused, care.

A byproduct of this atmosphere is the optimistic outlook among those in the business of providing private medical care in England. Whether one visits Wellington Hospital—the most expensive private hospital in Britain, which has more and better equipment than many much larger public hospitals—or talks to the executives of BUPA—roughly the British equivalent of Blue Cross—the mood is upbeat. There are millions of Britons who are fed up with the waits and delays of the National Health Service, one is told, and as soon as Whitehall relaxes the present strict wage controls, thousands of additional British companies are going to make private medical care available to their workers.

What all this means in human terms becomes apparent when one visits St. Thomas's Hospital, the world-famous teaching hospital. There the facts of British medical life are explained by Mrs. Joyce Higgins, the admissions officer, who seems to possess an inexhaustible flow of statistics.

At the moment, according to Mrs. Higgins, St. Thomas's has 3,500 people on its waiting list, but judging by experience most of them will never be admitted. The reason is that the hospital's 850 beds are simply inadequate to satisfy the demand. To handle the situation, patients on the waiting list are classified into three main groups, "urgent," "soon," and "in turn." It is the members of the last group who are most likely never to be admitted.

Mrs. Higgins put the essence of the matter in these vivid words: "The closer to death you are, the better chance you have of getting a bed." But even the "urgent" group patients may have to wait up to six months to be admitted. Her biggest problem, Mrs. Higgins said, was a large group of urological patients for whom resources are especially inadequate. Many of these people have visible blood in their urine but cannot be properly examined or treated for months, unless their condition deteriorates visibly and dramatically.

But there is a special group of patients who get exceptional consideration, Mrs. Higgins said. These are women who have palpable lumps in their breast. Any such woman applying for admission can be seen and examined within a month at most.

When asked why Britons put up with such long delays or the complete denial of admissions, Mrs. Higgins suggested that her countrymen are phlegmatic and accustomed to waiting, as in the queues at bus stops.

It is these long waits for admission into N.H.S. hospitals that explain the great emotional and political passions that have been invested recently in the national battle over pay beds. Private patients can "jump the queue" by engaging their physician for a private fee and paying the full cost of the bed and hospital medical service. The Labor Party wants to wipe out these pay beds, but they still exist.

In St. Thomas's Hospital they are on the top floor of the hospital's newest building and each private room commands a breathtaking view of London. Most of the private patients, observable there were apparently foreigners.

This man's crime made him a hero.

In 1735 printing the truth was a crime. The press was free only so long as it didn't offend anyone in power.

Then along came John Peter Zenger, A German immigrant. A naive man in his way because he listened to people who pleaded with him to print criticism of the government. And when he did what they asked he was jailed and brought to trial. His crime, printing the truth.

Of course, today Zenger is a hero. But his heroism has been muted by the years. His story retold so often it's become a cliché. Like the words truth and freedom. Giant words, thrown about so lightly that they now seem vague and emptied of their promise.

Truth and freedom are the heart and soul of a free society. The people of this country have a constitutional right to know the truth. And at Knight-Ridder Newspapers we feel it's our responsibility to give it to them. Fairly and accurately. We also believe in a free press as the necessary protection of our other freedoms. And naturally we believe that each one of our newspapers must be free. Completely free to serve its own community in its own way. All of us understand the importance of truth and freedom. And we hope there will always be men like John Peter Zenger with the kind of courage it takes to give these words their real meaning.

AND THAT'S

THE STORY.

Trendex tells you the whole story.

You know how Trendex works. It's an independent survey of 71,000 U.S. households, done on a national probability basis. A cross-section of every market you sell. It tells you who buys what. And when.

And now, for the first time, you can compare first-marriage households vs. total households.

The champ? The bride-to-be. For product after product, she's the most efficient customer you can reach anywhere.

Look at the facts. October through December 1975, the acquisition rate of ranges by brides* was 4 times that of total households. And for the six months from July through December 1975, the rate of first-time marriage households who acquired blenders was 9 times the acquisition rate of total households. For irons, it was 11 times. For table mixers, over 7.

Trendex proves it. It's the bride-to-be who does the big buying. And that makes perfect marketing sense.

The girl getting married for the first time has nothing. Needs everything. That's why brides spend more in a shorter period of time than any other group measured by Trendex.

Let Trendex prove it to you. You can't find a better customer anywhere. And you reach her in Modern Bride. The one magazine read by eight out of every ten girls passing through the bridal market.

An Indian Town Recalls Lillian Carter Fondly...

VIKROOLI, India — Ten years ago a white-haired Peace Corps nurse from Plains, Ga., who was working in the community center here would talk a bit about her son Jimmy, predicting great things for him.

"But we never dared to dream that Jimmy might be President of the United States," Mrs. Mowdwalla continued, her dark eyes sparkling with excitement, as they do each time she mentions his current political goal.

"She saw a television advertisement for Peace Corps volunteers, which stated, 'Age is no barrier.' She sent off for information, and then came in to announce that she was joining the Peace Corps for service in Africa or India. We were not particularly surprised."

Among her other activities, she attended a weekly Hindu discussion group at the invitation of the all-male members. talize the city," said an enthusiastic Mayor Coleman A. Young to several hundred persons. He said that the trolley, built at a cost of about $1.5 million and extending about a mile from the Grand Circus Park on the north to the huge Cobo Hall convention complex on the south, would soon be complimented by sidewalk cafes and a return to the clean look that made the street famous.

while old-timers laughed and joked about when Detroit was dominated by streetcars. "I was riding them when they only cost 6 cents," said 61-year-old Gertrude Wilson, who grew up here. And a friend with her added, "Yeah, and a transfer was just a penny."

other announcements here, that the Mayor, hungry for good news, can easily classify as good news. Last week the Ford Motor Company announced that it was moving 1,000 employees to the Renaissance Center, the cornerstone of the revitalization of this city's downtown area, from its suburban offices in Dearborn. The move will be made next fall.

The trolley, after a 20-year absence, on Washington Boulevard in Detroit.

A new Book of Common Prayer will soon be used in the Episcopal Church. The House of Bishops almost unanimously approved revisions in the book, the most extensive in more than 400 years, at the church's convention. The House of Delegates, the lay and clerical part of the convention, approved a different set of revisions last Saturday. Final action was delayed until either the delegates accept the bishops' revisions or a committee works out a compromise. [1:3-5.]

Senator James L. Buckley was endorsed by Abraham Bimfeld, who ran last in the five-candidate Democratic Senatorial primary. However, the Senator will not be supported by his Republican colleague in the Senate, Jacob K. Javits. Two years ago, Mr. Buckley refused to endorse Mr. Javits. [1:3.]
The parole system is "a shambles" and the probation system even worse, according to the head of a correction system watchdog agency. The official, Stephen J. Chinnund, said he was in favor of doing away with the whole system since the programs did nothing to stem recidivism. [1:4.]

Unexpected opposition by California to oil deliveries by tanker to Los Angeles from the Alaska pipeline has forced a stunned Washington to reconsider some of the basic assumptions about the long fought-over pipeline. Environmental concerns and a projected West Coast oil surplus have forced Washington to think about such alternatives as exporting the oil to Japan or bringing it through the Panama Canal to refineries. # Kermit Bloomgarden, Producer Of Many Outstanding Plays, Dead

By ALBIN KREBS

Kermit Bloomgarden, an accountant turned producer who brought to Broadway many distinguished plays, including "Death of a Salesman," "Look Homeward, Angel," "The Music Man" and "Equus," died yesterday at his home in New York City at the age of 71.

Mr. Bloomgarden had been suffering from a brain tumor for more than six months; but had continued to work. Last week he attended rehearsals for "Equus," which will reopen soon on Broadway, and he was also active in production planning for the forthcoming drama "Poor Murderer."

Mr. Bloomgarden was considered by many in the theater to be what one director yesterday called "the perfect producer—one who stands aside and understandingly lets the artists do their jobs, interfering as little as possible."

The Brooklyn-born Mr. Bloomgarden once put the matter in his own way: "A producer is a man who throws out sparks that will stimulate the author and director to make better use of their own creativity, rather than as a dictator who gives literal orders which, if followed, will often kill the quality of the play."

Born on Dec. 15, 1904, Mr. Bloomgarden was the son of Zeman and Annie Groden Bloomgarden. He attended Brooklyn schools and graduated as an accounting major from New York University in 1926. He worked as a certified public accountant until 1932, when, at a dinner party, he met Arthur Beckhard, a Broadway producer, who convinced him, Mr. Bloomgarden recalled, that "the theater was for me."

Drama Critics Circle Award and a Pulitzer Prize.

During that same fruitful season, Mr. Bloomgarden sponsored Miss Hellman's adaptation of Jean Anouilh's "The Lark," starring Julie Harris as well as the musical "The Most Happy Fella," starring Robert Weede and adapted from Sidney Howard's drama, "They Knew What They Wanted."

The producer's remarkable winning record continued in 1957. On Nov. 28, Thanksgiving night, Broadway acquired a solid hit in "Look Homeward, Angel," and on Dec. 19, the Bloomgarden touch was applied with similar results to Meredith Willson's "The Music Man."

For "Look Homeward, Angel," Mr. Bloomgarden was willing to take some significant chances. Based on the novel by Thomas Wolfe, the play was written by Ketti Frings, whose reputation had been made not on the stage but as a writer of screenplays. And as director whose background until then had been rooted in television. The play made Anthony Perkins a major Broadway star and won Miss Frings a Pulitzer Prize.

Over the years, Mr. Bloomgarden's name appeared in the credits of many other theatrical attractions, including Miss Hellman's "Toys in the Attic," Mr. Miller's "The Crucible," Stephen Sondheim's "Anyone Can Whistle," the musical "Milk and Honey" and Lanford Wilson's "The Hot L Baltimore."

Returned to Active Ranks

In 1971 Mr. Bloomgarden, who until then had been in good health, underwent amputation of his right leg because of arteriosclerosis. However, after a long period of recuperation, he returned to the active ranks of Broadway producers with Peter Shaffer's "Equus" in 1974.

A shy and reticent man, Mr. Bloomgarden was once described by an admiring colleague as "a quiet worrier."

About choosing plays, he had this to say: "You don't think in money-making terms. It's doing something you feel has merit. Over the years I've proven itself. My record is a little over 50-50—that's a good commercial record. But every time I did a show I had a tough time raising the money, especially for the important plays, 'Diary of Anne Frank'—it was almost impossible to raise money. 'Music Man'—very difficult."

Mr. Bloomgarden was active in several Broadway theater organizations and served as president of the League of New York Theaters and Producers. During World War II he directed the activities of the Stage Door Canteen, which provided entertainment and recreation for servicemen.

The producer's first wife, Hattie Richardson, who sang under the name Linda Lee, died in 1942. He was divorced from his second wife, the former Virginia Kaye Chesney, in 1950. He has two sons, John, who worked with his father in recent years, and David, a medical student. Also surviving is a sister, Violet Fox.

According to his wishes, Mr. Bloomgarden, who lived at 275 Central Park West, was to be cremated. There will be no funeral service.

Produced 'Montserrat'

Continuing his association with Lillian Hellman, Mr. Bloomgarden in 1949, coproduced the playwright's "Montserrat," which was unsuccessful. So was his production, the following year, of Miss Hellman's "The Autumn Garden," but a revival of her "The Children's Hour," mounted shortly afterward, was a modest success.

Noting that he had had his share of failures, Mr. Bloomgarden said after the abrupt closing of "The Man" which he presented in collaboration with Martin Ritt: "I've done only one play because I thought it would make money, and that was a miserable failure."

There were more failures, but far more hits, to come. Following September 1955 and the following May, Mr. Bloomgarden, alone or in association with others, presented four major productions. First there was Mr. Miller's "A View From the Bridge," a modest success which was quickly followed by the enormously successful, from both critical and box-office standpoints, "The Diary of Anne Frank." That drama, written by Frances Goodrich and Albert Hackett and based on a diary kept by a doomed Jewish girl in World War II, won the

Dr. Brittain F. Payne, a retired New York City ophthalmologist and eye surgeon, who had a long association with the New York Eye and Ear Infirmary, died Sunday at his home in Great Barrington, Mass., at the age of 77.

Dr. Payne retired in 1972. He had been chief of ophthalmology at the Eye and Ear Infirmary, where he had been on the staff more than 40 years. He received his ophthalmological training at the hospital, graduating in 1929. He was also director of ophthalmology at Lenox Hill Hospital and a consultant to other hospitals.

Dr. Payne was born in Madisonville, Tex., and attended Rice Institute and the University of Texas Medical School. He was past president of the American Board of Ophthalmology, founder and past president of the Pan-American Association of Ophthalmology and a member of the American Ophthalmological Society.

He is survived by his wife, the former Jessemary Donald of New York; a daughter, Janet Fields of Charleston, S.C., and three grandchildren.

Felix J. Aulisi, a retired Judge Of State Supreme Court, 75

Felix J. Aulisi, a retired New York State Supreme Court justice, died yesterday in Amsterdam, N. Y., after a long illness. He was 75 years old.

Justice Aulisi, who moved to Amsterdam from Italy as a child, was a graduate of Union College and the Albany Law School.

He was appointed assistant Montgomery County district attorney in 1928 and four years later was elected to the county surrogate court. He held office as a judge in a number of courts, including eight years on the Appellate Division of the State Supreme Court, from which he retired last December.

He leaves his wife, the former Rose Dipito; a son, Joseph G.; two daughters, Rosalie A. Riccio and Nancy A. Catena; three brothers, Arthur C., also a Supreme Court justice, Edward A., and Alfred H.; a sister, Rose J. Aulisi, and 12 grandchildren.

Jacqueline W. Felter Dies at 67, Head of Medical Library Center

Jacqueline W. Felter, who retired in 1974 as director of the Medical Library Center of New York, died Sunday in Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center. She lived at 15-25 84th Avenue, Richmond Hill, Queens, and was 67 years old.

Mrs. Felter, who had been a member of the Library Center staff since 1961, was a co-designer and director of the Union Catalogue of Medical Periodicals Computer Center in New York. She was co-editor of the Handbook of Medical Library Services.

Her earlier positions included those of librarian at Memorial and the Medical Society of Queens County, and assistant librarian at New York Post-Graduate Medical Center. She was a graduate of Western Reserve University, now Case Western Reserve University, Cleveland.

She is survived by her husband, Irving D. Felter.

J. LENOX PORTER

J. Lenox Porter, a retired banker and a prominent amateur squash player, died at his Manhattan home yesterday. He was 66 years old.

Mr. Porter, a 1933 graduate of Yale University, joined the Bank of New York in 1933 and retired as a vice president in its metropolitan division in 1971.

DR. ROBERT PHILLIPS, LED CHOLERA FIGHT

Studies by Public Health Figure Aided Development of Therapies —He Headed a Navy Unit

By LAWRENCE K. ALTMAN

Dr. Robert Allan Phillips, whose research led to therapies that helped save the lives of hundreds of thousands of cholera victims, died yesterday at Clark Air Base in the Philippines. He was 70 years old.

Dr. Phillips, who was a leader in international public health, retired from the Navy Medical Corps in 1965 with the rank of captain after serving as commanding officer of Naval Medical Research Unit No. 2 in Taipei, Taiwan.

In the last five years, Dr. Phillips turned his scientific attention to research on the problems of nutrition in the developing areas of the world. He remained an active and medical investigator until his death. The cause of death was not disclosed, but he was known to have suffered from chronic liver disease.

Other doctors regarded Dr. Phillips as a brilliant physician who, after gaining an understanding of basic science, applied his knowledge to investigations that produced therapies used in the everyday practice of medicine throughout the world.

Traveled Widely in His Work

After working as a physiologist at the Cornell University Medical School and at the Rockefeller Institute here, Dr. Phillips lived abroad, traveling to most areas of the world to study the diseases that have killed man since ancient times.

"He had the grand view of medical research to solve many of the world's problems," Dr. John R. Seal, deputy director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Disease in Bethesda, Md., said in a telephone interview. Dr. Phillips had worked with Dr. Phillips in the Navy.

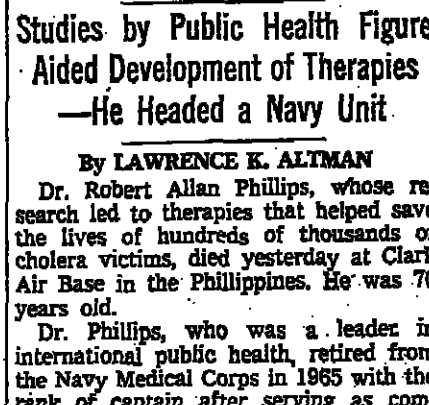

"His vision exceeded his means to do what he wanted to do," Dr. Seal added.

Dr. Phillips was born in Clear Lake, Iowa, and graduated from Iowa State University before earning his M.D. degree from Washington University in St. Louis in 1929.

While in New York at the Rockefeller Institute, Dr. Phillips worked with Dr. Donald D. Van Slyke, who pioneered in developing techniques used to monitor basic physiologic functions. In later years, Dr. Phillips told colleagues that he modeled his career after Dr. Van Slyke's.

Dr. Phillips joined the Navy in 1940 and stayed in the military until 1949, carrying on the tradition of military doctors who have made major contributions to public health.

When he was commanding officer of the medical research unit in Cairo from 1947 to 1949, Dr. Phillips began applying his interest in the physiology of the gut to the problem of cholera. He recognized that dehydration was the basic problem of cholera, and when he moved to Taiwan he embarked on an imaginative research program of simultaneously treating and studying victims of the intestinal disease, which is caused by the toxic effects of a bacterium called vibrio cholera.

By studying carefully the precise biochemical composition of the stools of hundreds of victims of cholera, rather than concentrating on studies of the blood as others had done, Dr. Phillips developed an intravenous replacement therapy that had a sound physiologic basis. He found that such therapy should be composed of fluids in about the same concentration as those normally in the body.

Thereafter, Dr. Phillips and others developed a solution that cholera victims could drink and that avoided the need for continued intravenous therapy. The oral solution is now considered standard therapy for cholera and other diarrheal diseases in much of the world.

As a result of his work, Dr. Phillips and others did in the 1950's and 60's, the death rate from cholera now is about 1 percent, compared with 50 percent or so until then.

Studies to Evaluate Vaccines

When Dr. Phillips retired from the Navy, he moved to Dacca, East Pakistan (now Bangladesh), where he directed the Pakistan-SEATO Cholera Research Laboratory and supervised studies evaluating the efficacy of cholera vaccines developed by scientists throughout the world.

In 1970, for family and health reasons, Dr. Phillips returned to Taipei, where his wife taught at the American School. With funds from the Navy and private foundations, Dr. Phillips adapted the techniques he learned from Dr. Van Slyke to study amino acid physiology in the blood and gut, among healthy and malnourished children.

Dr. Phillips received numerous awards, including the James D. Bruce award from the American College of Physicians, the Lasker award and the Stitt award.

He leaves his wife, the former Hope N. Fuess, and seven children.

There were more failures, but far more hits, to come. Following September 1955 and the following May, Mr. Bloomgarden, alone or in association with others, presented four major productions. First there was Mr. Miller's "A View From the Bridge," a modest success which was quickly followed by the enormously successful, from both critical and box-office standpoints, "The Diary of Anne Frank." ## Wine Country Tour Gives Mrs. Krupsak A Look at Problems

Mary Anne Krupsak tasting New York State wine on her tour

By FRANK J. PRIAL
Special to The New York Times

N.Y.—Picking her way through rocky vineyards and through the Hudson Valley wine country, Lieut. Gov. Mary Anne Krupsak toured the Hudson Valley wine country Saturday.

She, who readily admitted her lack of knowledge of wine, made the daylong tour, to help dramatize the New York State grape industry, to help dramatize the industry's problems.

The State Department of Agriculture, some 30,000 tons of wine in 1976 New York State will be "surplus." That is, the State will have more wine than it can sell. That is, the State will have more wine than it can sell. That is, the State will have more wine than it can sell.

Bus Driver Shoots at 3 Youths, Hitting One, After Being Stabbed

By PRANAY GUPTA

A New York City bus driver, who the Transit Authority said was carrying a gun in apparent violation of the agency's regulations, shot and wounded a youth early yesterday, moments after the youth and two accomplices had refused to pay the fare and had stabbed the driver in the back, the police said.

The police reported that the bus driver had ordered the youths to get off his bus in the Bedford-Stuyvesant section of Brooklyn after they had refused to pay the fare and that one of the youths then stabbed him.

But as the youths fled, the driver, Alejandro Torres, a 27-year-old former Transit Authority policeman, pulled out a .38-caliber revolver and fired five shots at them according to the police. They reported that one youth, John McCall, 18 years old, was wounded in a leg and in the back.

Both Mr. Torres, who lives at 27-21 Webster Avenue in the Bronx, and Mr. McCall, of 808 Park Avenue, Brooklyn, were reported to be in fair condition yesterday at Cumberland Hospital in Brooklyn.

The police also said that another youth, Bobby Brody, 16, of 43 Sumner Avenue in Brooklyn, had been arrested on charges of assault, and that a third youth, whom they did not identify, had escaped.

A spokesman for the Transit Authority said last night that the agency had begun an investigation of the incident.

Carrying Guns Against Policy
"Our bus drivers are not supposed to carry guns under Transit Authority policy," the spokesman said.

He noted, however, that Mr. Torres, who was among 297 transit policemen laid off in June last year, had a pistol permit issued by the New York City Police Department.

But a spokesman for the Police Department said: "Mr. Torres wouldn't have gotten a permit in his capacity as a bus driver. Such a permit is given only when a person is in a field where a weapon is required for livelihood."

He also pointed out that policemen from the Transit Authority, the Housing Authority and the regular Police Department were required to hand in their weapons at the time of retirement or other discontinuation of employment.

Former policemen, like all civilians, are not allowed to carry guns without a permit, the spokesman said, adding that at the time of application for such a permit, the Police Department requires the applicant's employer to furnish a letter explaining why the employee needs a weapon.

But when a spokesman for the Transit Authority was told of the Police Department spokesman's position, he replied: "We don't know why Mr. Torres [the bus driver] would have a permit."

The spokesman said that Mr. Torres had been hired as a bus driver last May and that he was among 230 former policemen who were now employed in a similar capacity with the Transit Authority.

However, the spokesman said he did not know how many other bus drivers carried weapons while on duty and he also was unable to say whether, in fact, Mr. Torres had obtained a pistol permit for another job or if the driver held a second job, which required that he carry a weapon.

Mr. Torres was unavailable for comment yesterday in Cumberland Hospital. One Transit Authority official said last night that the agency's police department had issued special forms to former policemen that, in effect, served as letters of support for an applicant's petition for a pistol permit. He could not say if Mr. Torres had been given such a letter.

Practice Called Common
"But I would not be surprised—this is a fairly routine matter," he said. "If he had asked for a form he must have gotten it. His record was good."

The official, who declined to be identified, added: "We all know that retired city cops all carry guns."

But a spokesman for the Police Department, when told of this, insisted that "no police officer, past or present, carries a gun without a permit."

However, he said he could not provide details of Mr. Torres's application for a permit because he did not have access to records last night.

Sidney Baumgarten, an aide to Mayor Beame, said last night that although the Transit Authority was not directly under the Mayor's jurisdiction, he would investigate the shooting incident, which occurred at Myrtle Avenue and Spencer Street.

A Small City Upstate Overpowers a Utility

The smallest city in New York State won a victory yesterday against one of the biggest public utilities in the state when the Public Service Commission agreed to let Sherrill (population 3,000) set up its own power company. In the process, the utility, Niagara Mohawk Power Corporation, is losing one of its largest customers.

Niagara Mohawk, which serves about 1.3 million customers in 37 upstate counties, had charged last July that Sherrill, in Oneida County, was attempting to "pirate" away one of its major customers, Oneida Ltd., the manufacturer of silverware and flatware.

The transfer would be undertaken through the Sherrill-Kenwood Power and Light Company, a subsidiary of Niagara Mohawk, which supplies Oneida with power and will now be taken over by the city with a $1.5 million bond issue.

Demonstrators Block East Meadow Traffic

A demonstration by 50 housewives and children stopped traffic in East Meadow, L.I., several times yesterday morning on Hempstead Turnpike. Nassau County policemen held back cars as the demonstrators marched at the Prospect Avenue intersection, near the spot where 14-year-old Deborah Kaplita was struck and killed by a passing car June 9.

The girl's mother, Kathleen Kaplita of East Meadow, who organized the picketing, said she had gathered 3,000 signatures on petitions asking the State Transportation Department to lower the speed limit on the turnpike and post "school zone" signs on the turnpike, between Merrick Avenue and Bellmore Avenue, where local children frequently cross to reach three local schools. Another daughter, 16-year-old Maryann Kaplita, was hit by a car three years ago at Hempstead Turnpike and Prospect Avenue, but survived after suffering a concussion.

Bergman Move Awaited

A stay of a one-year state sentence given Bernard Bergman for bribery expired yesterday, but because the nursing-home operator is serving a four-month Federal prison term for tax and Medicaid fraud, there was no immediate effect.

Gustave Newman, one of Mr. Bergman's attorneys, and Charles J. Hynes, the state's special prosecutor for nursing-home cases, appeared in State Supreme Court and agreed that a continuance of the stay would be "academic."

Mr. Hynes repeated that he would not drop state fraud charges against Mr. Bergman and Mr. Bergman's son Stanley until he had seen what action Mr. Bergman's attorneys took.

College Construction

Ralph G. Caso, the Nassau County Executive, said that $35 million would be appropriated by the county to complete five major construction projects at the Nassau Community College at Michel Field in Garden City, L.I. Work on two instructional wings, a library, an administration building and a physical education building was halted last November when the State Dormitory Authority was unable to sell the necessary bonds to finance the completion of the work. The state agency has already spent $33 million, or about half the total cost, on the projects.

5 Homes Broken Into

Burglars broke into five homes in the exclusive Belle Haven section of Greenwich, Conn., during the weekend, escaping with an undetermined amount of valuables, the police said. Among the missing items were a sterling silver service valued at $2,000 and cars from two homes, authorities said. Other silver items, gold bracelets and rings also were reported missing in the break-ins Friday and Saturday evenings. The police said that in four of the five cases the homes had been entered by breaking through a glass door or window and reaching through to open the door. In the fifth house the burglars entered through an unlocked door. None of the homes was occupied at the time, officials said.

Welfare Fraud Charged

Patricia Stanley, 24-year-old mother of five children, was arrested on charges of fraudulently obtaining $20,000 in welfare payments. Investigation Commissioner Nicholas Scopetta said Mrs. Stanley, of 1378 Park Place in Brooklyn, had used eight aliases to obtain illegal payments from five different Brooklyn welfare centers.

Purchasing Power Down

The purchasing power of take-home pay by factory production workers in the New York-Northeast New Jersey area was down 3.1 percent between June and July, the United States Labor Department reported. Herbert Bienstock, regional commissioner of the department's Bureau of Labor Statistics, said the loss resulted from a 4.4 percent rise in consumer prices that exceeded an increase in factory workers' earnings went up 2.1 percent, or 32 cents, in July to $201.48, Mr. Bienstock said.

Adult Home for Chinese Is First of Its Kind

By JUDITH CUMMINGS

Did he miss Chinatown? "No. I like it here," he said. He has picked up the habit of taking walks, he said, something he never did in Chinatown. Another longtime Chinatown resident, Fu Dong, visiting his wife, told a stranger that he had watched the streets grow too dangerous for her to live comfortably at home.

"It started, I tell you, in 1950," he said. "So much fighting—the young people—bang, bang, bang." Here, everything is better. That's the United States country."

Nathan Berger, director of the borough office of the city Department of the Aging, said neighborhood residents had been unhappy about the building of the facility on what had been a vacant lot, but that they had been somewhat soothed by promises from the operators not to seek former mental patients, as some other adult homes do.

Though Mr. Sirangelo employs a coordinator to recruit residents from Chinatown, he said he also hopes to serve people from Staten Island.

Gloria O'Donnell, a social worker at Doctors' Hospital, who was checking out the home for potential referrals, liked the facility but had doubts about the concept.

"They're going to have trouble filling it up," she said. "This is a predominantly Italian-American community, and I would have second thoughts about sending Italian-Americans there. I'd be afraid they might not be comfortable."

Chinatown is one of the most crowded communities in New York. Staten Island is one of the least. Small wonder, then, that to about 50 elderly former Chinatown residents a new adult home set in among the tall trees and Victorian houses of St. George, S. I., is a rather special place.

The operators of the modern seven-story residence, which sponsored a kind of open house yesterday, say the 400-bed home is the first in the nation especially designed for elderly persons of Oriental descent.

That means, for example, that Chinese meals are served along with American-style, that Chinatown newspapers are provided, and that Chinese music is played in a recreation room where men sit intent over mah-jongg.

Home Opened in June

The Anna Erika Home for Adults, at 110 Henderson Avenue, was opened in June and is not quite 20 percent occupied with 76 residents, about two-thirds of them Chinese, according to Joseph F. Sirangelo, administrator and one of the owners.

An adult home provides a residence and meals for older persons who are in good health and do not require the medical attention of a nursing home.

Eighty-five-year-old Pong Yine sat gazing out of a large window in a breeze-freshened two-person room. Like most of the residents, though he had lived and worked in Manhattan for decades, he spoke English with difficulty.

A Designer Gets Ahead Of Himself

Karl Lagerfeld at Saks Fifth Avenue with mannequin in one of his snug-waisted styles, a silk taffeta skirt and blouse.

The New York Times-Tyrene Dokes

By BERNADINE MORRIS

Karl Lagerfeld pulled up to Saks Fifth Avenue in a taxi yesterday and looked at the clothes in the windows. They looked vaguely familiar. It took him a few moments to realize why: He had designed them.

He did it in April, when his fall collection for Chloé was shown in Paris. Now his mind is already racing to spring and summer clothes, the collection that is being put together to be shown next month.

"I'm interested in what I am doing and what I will do, not what I have done," he explained, his mind flicking back to Paris as he strolled through the Chloé boutique at Saks, where dresses for $1,150 were selling as quickly as, say, $49 styles elsewhere.

"If dresses are going to be tighter, then I will have to have more rehearsals," he said. Snugger clothes means that the mannequins who show them will have to be fitted more precisely, he explained.

Saks Fashion Show Today

Clothes will be tighter, at least around the waist, he observed as he settled into a fitting room and checked some styles that a mannequin will wear at a fashion show in the store today for the benefit of the Society of Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center. He had anticipated the current vogue for sashed waists and taffeta skirts last April.

"You have to put it in the context of today," he went on. "You can't have bones and wires—you must find other ways to make torsos shapely."

One way that involves him is to design in two layers: one snug, the other oversized. The problem then is to keep everything light.

"Not with linings," he said. "If we go back to linings, then we are returning to the way things were, not looking ahead."

Wore Two Raincoats

Recently, he bought a raincoat for himself in Paris from Kenzo's men's collection. He liked the look, but it seemed rather flimsy. So he bought another raincoat, the identical style, and wore one over the other.

"I met Kenzo in the street, and he didn't even recognize his coat," Lagerfeld said triumphantly.

The two raincoats are a clue to how he will design clothes that have more shape but remain in a modern idiom.

Mr. Lagerfeld has done a lot to mold that idiom. A designer's designer, he is watched carefully for his innovations, which are as technical as finding ways to avoid linings, eliminating seams whenever possible and finishing hems with overcast stitches instead of turned-under hems. All this in the interest of keeping clothes light and fluid.

He is also one of the important bridges between the haute couture world (he calls it "high fashion") and the world of ready-to-wear. Despite his very high prices, Mr. Lagerfeld's clothes are ready-to-wear. A lot of his experimentation is in the area of finding ways to make clothes fit a great many different figures without the luxury, to a designer, of two or three fittings.

The prospect of a closer fit provides Mr. Lagerfeld with a whole new set of challenges.

It's one, he's equipped to handle, having started working in fashion 22 years ago. He was 16 years old then, and had won a design competition sponsored by the International Wool Bureau. (His prize was for the best coat submitted; Yves Saint Laurent won the prize for the best dress.)

As a result of that event, Mr. Lagerfeld went to work for Pierre Balmain as an assistant designer. "Yves was working for Dior," Mr. Lagerfeld said. "Other young people I knew were working with Balenciaga, whom they thought was God, but I wasn't so impressed."

Moved to Jean Patou

After three and a half years, he moved to Jean Patou, another couture house.

"I became bored there, too," he said, "and I quit and tried to go back to school, but that didn't work, so I spent two years mostly on beaches—I guess I studied life."

At this point, he even thought of going into his father's business, he said. His father made condensed milk, which he distributed throughout Germany and France; eventually he sold his business to Carnation.

In the early part of the 1960's, the ready-to-wear business was just beginning to develop stature in France, and Mr. Lagerfeld realized that was the field for him. He was introduced to the people who ran Chloé, started to do freelance work for them and eventually became part of the team.

Now he is involved in a great many enterprises. There is a perfume called Chloé, brought out by Elizabeth Arden, which has just added soap and bath powder in the same scent. He has franchises in Germany and Japan, and has plans for a collection of clothes, "a little younger, a little less expensive," that will be sold under the name of Lagerfeld.

"Dresses alone are too limited," he said. "Sometimes the accessories are more important. A boot or a belt or a scarf can change the look of a dress."

So he designs accessories as well as clothes.

"When people ask me what I do, 'designer' seems inadequate," he said. "I tell them I'm in the fashion business. But that is what happens with ready-to-wear. You become an entrepreneur."

As far as designing, "You can't intellectualize it," he said. "You read all the newspapers, you get involved with all kinds of people, you try to observe everything and then you forget it—you go on instinct."

"If what you produce is right for the moment, if it is what people want and feel comfortable with, then it is a success. If not, you go back and try again."

An All-Day Seminar on Divorce By Someone Who Knows All About It

By LAWRENCE VAN GELDER

Who is David I. Levine and why is he renting Madison Square Garden from 8 A.M. to 5:29 P.M. on Saturday, Oct. 23?

David I. Levine is a 57-year-old multimillionaire from Norfolk, Va., who intends to run an all-day seminar on divorce.

A lawyer?

No. A successful land developer and builder.

He is paying $42,000 and has agreed to pay 2 1/2 percent of the net receipts, if any, above $130,000 to the Garden, as well as additional expenses for advertising this event.

Not a Money-Maker

"I'm not doing this for profit," he asserted the other day. "It's impossible to make money on this venture."

But Mr. Levine says he is doing it because he regards himself as an expert on divorce, having gone through two of them in recent years—the first after 30 years of marriage.

"Until 1973, I didn't know a thing about divorce," he said. "But what I do know I learned the hard way."

And now, he said, "I'm doing this to help people who've been complaining. They don't know what their rights are. I'm not practicing law. I'm trying to tell people who are scared to death of lawyers how to deal with lawyers and cut down on their expenses."

Mr. Levine is not fond of lawyers, but he says he does "love to teach and explain things." So, another of his reasons for putting on the seminar is that, "For someone at my age, when you've experienced just about everything, you like to feel needed and doing something that is important to somebody—a lot of people."

Says He Made Mistakes

Among the mistakes Mr. Levine believes he made in his own divorce are having picked the wrong lawyer, a specialist in real estate rather than divorce, having been overly generous and trusting toward "the other side," and having been subjected to what he regards as shifting definitions of presumption of adultery.

"I use personal anecdote," Mr. Levine said, describing the seminar style that might be displayed in other arenas if the Madison Square Garden event satisfies him. "I'm going to show how everything I did was wrong, how everything my lawyers told me was wrong. And based on my mistakes, I'm trying to give the people—through my personal anecdotes—my experiences so they'll learn a lesson. If I told them what I did right, they'd fall asleep."

Since his divorce, Mr. Levine has discovered, that a lot of people are also divorced. He's dated some of them, he said, and listened to their stories.

"I think in the high schools of America there should be a mandatory course on the dangers and perils of marriage and divorce," he said. "This subject is much more important than Greek and Latin to the average American student. If it were taught in a practical way, so that the kids realized what they were up against before they married impetuously and had children right away only to be left alone to support them a few years later, it is possible there would be more enlightenment and less suffering."

The title of Mr. Levine's seminar is "All About Divorce." Its subtitle is "and lots about marriage," and Mr. Levine bills himself as the organizer and moderator, and advertises the event as dealing with the legal and tax aspects of marriage and divorce.

The advertised program consists of a discussion of alternatives to marriage, antenuptial agreements, separation agreements and the role of attorneys, as well as Mr. Levine's observations about dating.

Booklet and Checklist

Along with the talk comes a booklet that, amid biographical material, an agenda and some poetry, includes a couple of samples of antenuptial agreements, and a checklist for a separation agreement, with explanations of the various provisions.

While acknowledging that the program will be presented between 9 A.M. and 5 P.M. on Oct. 23 is still flexible, Mr. Levine said he does plan to have on hand an aide who is knowledgeable about taxes, and at least one who will tell him which questions submitted by him can be answered without illegality.

The seminar, he said, is for groups of people—those and planning to marry (many of these will already be contemplating divorce) are already involved in those who are divorce and plan to remarry.

Mets Sink Pirates on Mazzilli's Homer

Pittsburgh Falls, 5-4, on 2-Run, 2-Out Clout in 9th by Rookie

By THOMAS ROGERS

The sky fell down on the Pittsburgh Pirates yesterday at Shea Stadium. Seconds after Lee Mazzilli had belted a two-run homer with two out in the last of the ninth inning that lifted the Mets to a 5-4 victory, the Pirates seemed to have cement in their base- ball shoes as they trudged off the field with their heads down, losers again to the Mets.

The victory was New York's fifth in six games over the Pirates in one week. They had taken two games in Pitts- burgh on Sept. 13 and 14. Yesterday's amazing triumph gave the Mets three victories in a four-game series here.

Once again the Mets smashed Pitts- burgh's faint chances of overtaking the Philadelphia Phillies in the race for the title in the National League's Eastern Division. The Phils, who did not play yesterday, hold a 4 1/2-game lead with less than two weeks left to play.

"I guess I'll remember this a long time," said Mazzilli, a 21-year outfield- er from Brooklyn who was the Mets' No. 1 choice in the free-agent draft in June, 1973. "I floated around the bases."

Quick Change in Fortune

The Mets were trailing, 4-3, with two out in the ninth and a good part of the small crowd of 5,922 was heading for the exits.

But John Milner pinch hit for Bob Apodaca and lined a single to center field. Mazzilli, a switch-hitter who earlier had filed out, singled, walked and been called out on strikes, took two pitches from Kent Tekulve for balls.

"I was waiting for a fastball," he said. "And it came in about belt high." The ball soared on a high arc to right field and dropped into the Met bull pen where Joe Pignatano, a Met coach, retrieved it for the rookie hero.

Mazzilli was called up from Jackson of the Texas League on Sept. 6 and hit a pinch-hit homer right-handed off Darold Knowles of the Cubs on Sept. 8 at Wrigley Field. He was batting left-handed yesterday. "I'll remember that first one and this one a long time," he said in the clubhouse.

5 Singles For 3 Runs

The Mets had taken a 3-0 lead in the third inning off John Candelaria on singles by Bud Harrelson, Mazzilli, Felix Millan, Joe Torre and Dave King- man.

The Mets, who are not officially out of the race, have moved to 10 games over .500 with 80 victories and 70 losses. At 10 games out of first place, they are closer to the top than they have been since early this season. The New Yorkers trail Pittsburgh by 5 1/2 games and the Phillies by 10.

The Mets have been bolstered in re- cent weeks by the return of the slug- ger, Kingman, who had two hits yester- day, and seems fully recovered from the thumb injury that sidelined him last month. Stearns, the catcher, and Mazzilli have also given Manager Joe Frazier a brighter outlook for next sea- son.

Brewers Stop Yanks, 4-2; Nettles Hits 29th Homer

By MURRAY CHASS

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 20—The MIL- waukee Brewers gave the expiring Baltimore Orioles at least one extra day of life tonight and gave the Yan- kees additional time to ice their champagne.

The Brewers defeated the Yankees, 4-2, which means the Yankees will have to win two games to end the di- vision race, instead of one, against the Orioles in their four-game series that starts at Yankee Stadium tomorrow night.

The Yankees already have the cham- pagne stocked at the Stadium in an- ticipation of their first such celebration since 1964.

"It's domestic champagne," Manager Billy Martin said before the game. "I think we should use domestic rather than imported."

Milwaukee built this victory before a crowd of about 2,500 faithful fans on the feats of a trio of players with in- teresting names.

New Brewer Names

Danny Thomas, a rookie who prefers to be known as Dan so he won't be confused with the comedian, hit a home run in the fourth inning that snapped a 2-2 tie that Craig Nettles had achieved with his 29th home run, and a run- scoring single.

Gary Beare, who for some reason hasn't been named Yogi yet, was the winning pitcher, scattering six other hits besides Nettles' hits, before he needed relief help in the ninth.

And the men who extinguished the Yankees' threat in that inning was Castro—Bill, not Fidel.

Carlos May led off the ninth with a double and Ray Sadecki relieved Beare, a 24-year-old rookie. Sadecki retired Nettles on a grounder that sent May to third, but walked Lou Piniella, a pinch-hitter.

Manager Alex Grammas then brought in Castro and he set down two more pinch-hitters—Cesar Tower on a strikeout and Elrod Hendricks on a fly ball.

Brewers Score in First

Ken Holtzman, who often has expe- rienced one bad inning this season even in games he has won, didn't waste time encountering it tonight. The Brewers scored two runs in the first inning before two were out.

With one out, Sixto Lezcano got a hit when Jim Mason failed to handle his bouncer cleanly at short and George Scott doubled him to third. Henry Aaron then walked, loading the bases, and Don Money followed with a single to left that brought in Lezcano and Scott.

The runs were the first Money had driven in against the Yankees in 44 times at bat this season. Money could tell you he already had knocked in four—with a grand-slam homer in the second game of the season. But that hit was nullified by the Yankees' call of time out, which neither the Brewers nor Dave Pagan, the pitcher, heard.

Aaron, who stopped at second on Money's single, was in position to score the 2,174th run of his career, but Holtz- man retired the next two batters on fly balls, preventing Aaron from trying Babe Ruth for second on the all-time, runs-scored list behind Ty Cobb (2,244).

Nettles got the Yankees' first run off Beare with his home run in the second

Ali's Chant: 'Norton Must Fall'

KIAMESHA LAKE, N.Y.—In his white terrycloth robe, Muhammad Ali was shouting, "Norton must fall!" and waving his right arm in a chanting motion. Soon all the spectators who had attended his workout at the Concord Hotel were shouting, "Norton must fall, Norton must fall," and the world heavyweight champion was conducting a rehearsal. "I want everybody at Yankee Stadium," he was saying now, "to yell on my call, 'Norton must fall, Norton must fall,'" and the people resumed their chants. Boxing's doctor of crowd psychology wants to raise the odds against Ken Norton to 80,000 to 1 (from 8 to 5 as they are now) next Tuesday night.

He's done it before. When George Foreman in Zaire, he had thousand chanting, "Ali, bumaye," meaning, "All, kill him." And in Manila a year ago he had people chanting, "Frazier must fall." Muhammad Ali never both- ered with a chant for Richard Dunn or Jimmy Young or Jean-Pierre Coopman—he didn't take them seriously. But obviously he is taking Ken Norton seriously.

"That's gonna be the thing in Yankee Stadium," the cham- pion was saying calmly now. "That'll affect any man."

Muhammad Ali had returned to the quiet of his big room on the top floor of the Concord's golf clubhouse.

'I Can Punch Hard Now'

"I'm ready, I'll knock him out," he was saying in a black- and-white patterned robe after a shower. "I'm 220. I want to be 218 at the weigh-in, 222 at fight time. My weight's ready. And my hands are ready. Both of those Norton fights, I didn't train one round on the heavy bag. My hands hurt too much. I needed Novocain shots in 'em the night of the fight. But that made my hands numb. You can't feel yourself

The New York Times/Edward Hassner
Muhammad Ali: Heavy-bag training's the secret.

hittin' a man. And by round 10, they start hurtin' again. And I had to dance and flick punches."

Three years ago Ali lost a 12-round split decision to Norton and suffered a broken jaw in San Deigo in their first fight. Then he earned a 12-round split decision in Los Angeles in the rematch six months later.

"But after that I found a heavy bag that didn't hurt my hands," Ali explained. "Most heavy bags are too hard because they have sand inside them. Sand don't give. But this one has rags and material packed inside. I've taken it everywhere with me—to Zaire, to Malaysia, to Manila, everywhere. My hands don't hurt any more. I can set now. I can punch hard now. Ken Norton is gonna be surprised."

In his workout Ali had donned the big black leather bag with thudding punches from a flat-footed stance.

"Muhammad needs more punching power," Dick Sadler had said as Ali trained, "to establish more command of the fight."

Dick Sadler guided George Foreman to the heavyweight title before their breakup after the Zaire bout. Before that, Sadler trained Sonny Liston and Archie Moore and for a few days in 1960 he was around the young Cassius Clay, who had come to San Diego after winning an Olympic gold medal.

"Dick Sadler," Ali proclaims, "is my special strategy coach, like he was in Manila."

All knows that Norton, like Frazier, remembers having been knocked out by George Foreman, who was then under Sadler's tutelage. Before the referee's instructions in the Manila bout, Ali and Sadler walked over by themselves to a neutral corner and stared at Frazier as the champion listened to the old trainer.

'I'm Younger Than Him'

"I told him," Sadler had said at the workout, "that he had to dominate the fight. You know what Frazier is going to do before he does it. Through the first five rounds, Ali had an easy fight because he did dominate it. When he went on the rope-a-dope, he caught hell for the next five rounds. But then he came back."

Despite the danger of the rope-a-dope, Ali apparently won't resist the temptation to use it against Norton.

"I never did the rope-a-dope with him yet," the champion was saying now in his room. "Norton likes to put you in a corner and whale away. I'll get in a couple good shots and go on the rope-a-dope. He'll punch himself out."

Ali was watching a video cassette of Ken Norton's last fight, a 10th-round knockout of Larry Middleton.

"See how open he is," Ali was saying. "Imagine me hit- tin' him when he's open like that. If he fought me like this, it'll be terrible. That's the way he stands, he can't change that. And he's 31 but I'm younger than him."

All, of course, is 34 years old now but the champion had an explanation.

"I'm extra super, I'm equal to 22," he said. "I'm so fast, I don't take much punishment. But he's really 31—look at him. The way he's throwing his hooks and jabs, look, right now, when he ducks up under me like that—oh, oh, oh, I'll knock him out. And with all the people hollerin'."

"You mean chanting, 'Norton must fall.'"

"Now you talkin'," Muhammad Ali said. "That's gonna be the thing in Yankee Stadium."

L'Heureux Turf Victor With Great Contractor

Great Contractor and L'Heureux both came from far back and won the two divisions of the $87,100 Lawrence Realization for 3-year-olds at Belmont Park yesterday.

Great Contractor, the $4.20-to-$1 third choice in the $43,550 first division, rallied from last place and beat Teddy's Courage by three-quarters of a length in 2:27 3/5 for the mile and a half over the Widener turf course.

Crackle, a 17-1 shot, was third, with the 6-5 favorite, Easy Gallop, sixth in the field of eight.

L'Heureux, the $2.30-to-$1 favorite in the $43,550 second division, rallied from sixth place down the backstretch and drew out to win by 4 1/2 lengths from Banghi. Chati was third in the field of eight, and the winning time was 2:27 4/5.

Great Contractor, ridden by Patrick Day and owned by Howard P. Wilson, paid $10.40, $5.60 and $3.80 for $2 across the board. He carried 117 pounds in scoring his first victory of the year, in 12 races. Teddy's Courage returned $5.20 and $3.50, and Crackle paid $5.40.

L'Heureux, an invader from California who had stopped off in Chicago and finished third in the Secretariat Stakes before coming to New York, was ridden by Donald Pierce. The colt topped top weight of 121 pounds and paid $6.60, $3.20 and $2.60. Banghi returned $4.60 and $3.80, and Chati paid $3.60.

Great Contractor earned $26,130, raising his earnings for the year to $92,940. Saron Stable's L'Heureux also won $26,130, for his fifth victory in 12 starts, increasing his earnings for 1976 to $135,985.

OCEANPORT, N.J., Sept. 20 (AP)—Poppy's Pony, ridden by William Nemele, the hottest jockey at Monmouth Park during the last month, scored an upset victory today, beating the favored Verne's Pride by a nose in the $10,000 allowance feature.

Poppy's Pony, carrying 114 pounds, completed the 1 1/16 miles in 1:44 2/5 over a fast track for his fourth victory of the year.

The 3-year-old gelding returned $15.20, $5.80 and $3.40. Verne's Pride, who narrowed a three-length deficit over the final quarter-mile, returned $4 and $2.40. Gallant Glory, third in the field of six, paid $2.80.

Karen's Tune Is Keystone Victor
CORNWELLS HEIGHTS, Pa., Sept. 20 (AP)—Karen's Tune, owned by Robert F. Horton, posted her second victory in two career starts by capturing the six-furlong allowance feature, for 2-year-old fillies, at Keystone Race Track today.

Karen's Tune, who carried 118 pounds and was ridden by Jaime Arceano, scored by a length over L'ag Time. Hallam Queen finished third, four lengths behind the winner, whose time was 1:12 2/5.

Karen's Tune was coupled in the betting with Honk Your Horn, and the entry paid $4.40, $2.80 and $2.20. L'ag Time returned $3.60 and $2.80, and Hallam Queen paid $2.40.

Cojak Beats Older Rivals
BOWIE, Md., Sept. 20 (AP)—Cojak, a ranking 3-year-old, defeated five older rivals to win the $10,000 Wells Corner Purse at Bowie Race Course today.

Cojak, winner of $106,123 this year, went the six furlongs in 1:10 with Tony Agnello in the saddle and won by 1 1/2 lengths.

He paid $2.60, $2.40 and $2.10. Go Go Roger paid $8.40 and $2.40, and Stomp and Go paid $2.40.

Wood, Field and Stream: Plaudits For a Book on Great Gull Island

From time to time, a splendid little book is born that comes so close to some of the truths one is seeking that one yearns to beseech the author to return to his desk, to travel farther along the dimly-lit trail to the end.

Such a work is Michael Harwood's "The View From Great Gull" (E.P. Dutton & Co., Ltd., 139 pp., illustrated, $8.95). But, before discussing his work, I would like to mention that volumes 2 and 3 of the Yale University Press "Handbook of North American Birds," which deal with waterfowl and which cost $30 each, are in my estimation the best single reference sources on the subject available, an astonishing achievement and splendid for an ornithologist or a serious student of ducks, geese and swans.

Now to Mr. Harwood. From April through September of 1974, he was a member of a volunteer crew working at the American Museum of Natural History's research station on Great Gull, a 17-acre island in eastern Long Island Sound about nine miles from New London and a nesting site for common and roseate terns. His book embraces the work with the birds, considerable history of the island and portraits of its human denizens past and present, including the young, intense Helen Hayes, who is a former president of the Linnaean Society of New York and director of the Great Gull Island research project.

Those who read the book will learn a great deal about terns. And here I cannot resist an anecdote about my delightful and zany friend, Ed Zern, who strolled down to the beach one morning and began flinging pebbles in the air in the general direction of some terns, not, I assure, with enough accuracy or force to even disturb the birds, but merely to set the stage for what follows.

He asked him what he was doing and he replied that it was his policy to leave no tern unstoned.

Harwood, who is also the author of "View From Hawk Mountain," follows Zern's dictum in unscrupled form. Yet his book is not merely ornithological observations, history, and character sketches, but also a sensitive man's troubled awareness that the human race has not yet been able to view itself with proper humility, has considered itself apart from the natural scheme of things, at worst superior and a conqueror, at best an uncommitted observer.

There is hope, however. For many of us, when we are not caught up in the hurly-burly of sheer survival or survival as we see fit to interpret it, sometimes sense that the tides of the ocean move in our blood, that the forces that affect the tern, the deer, the whale and the wolf affect us too.

This dreadful separateness that we have so long cherished is a self-deceit of cataclysmic import, and it is essential to the survival of all living things that men like Harwood are probing, however tentatively, a way to eliminate civilization's greatest lie.

Flying, backpacking and sailing courses are being offered by the West Side YMCA, 5 West 63d Street.

Last year's program was so successful, spokesman says, that it will be expanded, with courses also at the Vanderbilt "Y" at 224 East 47th Street and the Stuyvesant Park at 207 East 18th Street.

Flying will be taught by directors of Theodore Gordon Flyfishers. David Sutcliffe will be the instructor in the six-week backpacking course, which culminates in an overnight field trip. Other offerings are a course in bicycle repair, and a chance to practice one's outdoor skills at the West Side's 500-acre woodland retreat in Pawling, N. Y.

Some of the courses begin this week. Call or write to the "Ys" for further information.

Keenan's Manner as a Prosecutor Contrasts Sharply With Nadjari's

By TOM GOLDSTEIN

In his first three months as special state prosecutor, John F. Keenan has made few promises or predictions and has avoided the limelight while cleaning up old investigations, biting into the backlog of pending cases, negotiating jurisdictional problems with the city's five District Attorneys and turning over cases to them when he felt he had no jurisdiction.

So far, the tone of the Keenan administration has contrasted sharply with that of his predecessor, Maurice H. Nadjari, who became special prosecutor four years ago.

The office was a new one then and, with the help of a public relations aide, Mr. Nadjari sought public support in trying to root out corruption in the city's criminal-justice system. Members of that system resented him as an intruder. He upset the city's District Attorneys by taking away their cases and hiring away key staff members. He annoyed judges when he said he was checking the records of "more than 20" Supreme Court justices.

Other Changes

Mr. Keenan's low-keyed, methodical approach was reflected in a series of top-level staff changes he announced yesterday.

Roderick C. Lankier, the chief of the trial division in the New York County District Attorney's office, was named Mr. Keenan's chief assistant, replacing Joseph Phillips, an intense and zealous prosecutor.

Leslie Snyder, a second colleague of Mr. Keenan from his days in the Manhattan District Attorney's office, was named to the newly created post of chief of trials.

The money for that new job came in part from Mr. Keenan's decision not to have a public-relations specialist on his staff.

In another change, Thomas A. Duffy Jr., who had been the chief of the appeals bureau in the Queens District Attorney's office, took over the same job in the special prosecutor's office.

Mrs. Duffy, who worked under Mr. Keenan when the special prosecutor spent six months in the Queens' office in 1973, replaced Bennett Gershan, who is now teaching at Pace University Law School.

When Mr. Gershan left the office of District Attorney Frank Hogan to join Mr. Nadjari's staff, Mr. Hogan reacted bitterly. When Mr. Gershan offered to delay his departure for 30 days, Mr. Hogan said: "Go this afternoon. Go right now. No one's indispensable. You're not and I'm not."

Robert M. Morgenthau, who is now the Manhattan District Attorney, had no comment yesterday on the departure of two of his key aides.

At a news conference called to announce the staff changes, Mr. Keenan thanked Mr. Morgenthau and Nicholas Ferrero, the Queens District Attorney, for having released top aides "without their bickering and screaming too much."

Mr. Ferrero said he was "rather proud" that Mr. Duffy had been chosen. "It was a friendly transition," he said.

In other changes, Richard J. Condon, a deputy inspector in the Police Department who had been the commanding officer of the District Attorney's office squad in Manhattan, was named Mr. Keenan's director of investigations.

Joseph A. Comperati, also a deputy inspector, was named associate director of investigations. And Nicholas Cirillo, who had been a detective assigned to the Manhattan prosecutor's office, was named principal special investigator.

Edward M. Davidowitz, a former assistant in the Hogan office and now a trial lawyer, was also named to the staff.

STATE BANKING CHIEF TO TAKE HOUSING JOB

Heimann Reported Set to Become Carey's Top Policymaker—His Successor Not Yet Named

By LINDA GREENHOUSE

John G. Heimann, the State Superintendent of Banks, will leave the Banking Department at the end of the month to become the state's top policymaker in housing, a key aide to Governor Carey said yesterday.

Mr. Heimann, a specialist in housing finance, was originally supposed to take the vacant State Housing Commissioner's job around Labor Day. But his appointment has never been officially announced, and he has avoided all comment while supervising the state investigation into the troubled American Bank and Trust Company.

Yesterday Mr. Heimann would say only that he had been too busy with the investigation to think about his plans, but he has indicated to associates that he will take the housing job on terms that would give him some say over the now independent operations of three major state agencies in the housing field.

Successor Not Yet Picked

The Carey aide yesterday praised Mr. Heimann for his handling of the bank scandal, and said that the investigation was now well enough under way to be turned over to someone else. He said that Mr. Heimann's successor at the Banking Department would be chosen in a "week or two."

In his new job, Mr. Heimann would serve not only as Housing Commissioner but also as chairman of an internal Carey administration housing policy committee that would bring together the Urban fortable two-bedroom apartment with another older Peace Corps volunteer, Mabel Yewall, a Maryland resident.

Besides the job in the community center here, the candidate's mother, who is a registered nurse, worked during her two-year Indian tour at a dispensary that is part of the big, noisy factory in which the company, Godrej & Boyce Manufacturing, Ltd., makes steel furniture.

"What I beheld when I went in that door!" Mrs. Carter related later. "There were 40 patients sitting around waiting for the doctor. This doctor saw 200 to 300 patients every day, and I did everything but fill prescriptions. I did dressings, injections, helped the doctor examine and diagnose."

Among the experiences that most impressed her, she recalled, was the time she overcame an instinctive revulsion and forced herself to treat an 11-year-old who had leprosy. Finally reaching the point where she even let the child kiss her, Mr. Carter chose to recount the story in his autobiography as something that had greatly tested her courage and commitment.

A Letter Still Cherished

After Mrs. Carter went home in 1968, leaving "a major portion of her heart in India," as her son put it, she wrote a letter that Mrs. Mowdwalla still cherishes, describing how he met her, at the airport with a beige Lincoln Continental as a welcome-home present and how they celebrated with a chocolate cake.

In the years since, the two have kept up the correspondence. Mrs. Mowdwalla's most recent letter, Mrs. Carter wrote last June, reported that she was "very in days."

Although Vickroll is 10.0 from Plains, Mrs. Mowdwalla's friends yield to no one in their admiration for Mr. Carter's candidness if he wins in November? "We already planning the congr cable we'll send to Lily, and Mrs. Mowdwalla said. Lookin the unadorned whitewashed center," she added. "And it pose maybe we ought to r plaque or something."

Introducing The Credit Account

Once you have it, you'll understand credit better, and know how to use it right.

The Credit Account is pure bank credit.

A phone call or visit to European-American can get you the best kind of credit there is. Pure bank credit.

We call it The Credit Account. It's a separate account. Separate from your checking account. Separate from all other accounts. It's straight credit, pure and simple. Easy to use. Easy to understand.

Just qualify and we'll make from $1,000 to $10,000 available to you. Then, whenever you need money—for any reason you choose—you've got it.

The Credit Account is a lesson in using credit to your advantage.

The Credit Account helps you use credit right, because it's credit with built-in advantages.

Here are some of the ways to use credit as it ought to be used. Use The Credit Account instead of loans. You'll pay lower interest than on almost any installment loan.

Use it to pay off other credit that costs you more in interest. Like many department store charge accounts, credit card accounts, and revolving credit accounts.

Use The Credit Account to organize and pay off all your credit through one inexpensive credit source. One source, so you can review your entire credit picture at a glance.

And remember this, too: Unlike some other kinds of credit, The Credit Account costs you nothing until you use it. Not a cent.

Another advantage: privacy.

Once you have The Credit Account, why and when you need money becomes what it should be. Your business. Not ours.

You only have to apply for the Account once. After that, there are no interviews when you need money. No application forms to fill out. No trouble.

Call (212) 895-3404 (516) 248-7020 or (914) 761-6400.

You can get The Credit Account by phone, too. Call us from 9 a.m. until 9 p.m. any weekday.

Give us the information we need. We'll get back to you as soon as possible with the amount of credit we can put in your Credit Account.

Or if you like, stop in at the European-American branch that's best for you.

The Credit Account will help you use credit the way credit was meant to be used. It's smart, and it works.

G.N.P. and Profits Climb With Prices

The Commerce Department reported yesterday that the "real" gross national product, after-tax corporate profits and prices all rose more rapidly in the second quarter than previously estimated, according to revised figures for the period.

"Real" G.N.P., or the total output of goods and services adjusted for inflation, increased in the quarter at a 4.5 percent seasonal adjusted annual rate, according to the revised figures. This compared with the 4.3 percent rate previously estimated for the second quarter and the 9.2 percent rate of the first quarter.

After-tax corporate profits in the second quarter were put at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $82.7 billion compared with the $81.1 billion previously estimated and the $79.7 billion rate of the first quarter.

Prices, as measured by a G.N.P.-based index that is considered the broadest measure of inflation, rose at a 5.2 percent annual rate in the second quarter, or slightly faster than the 5.1 percent rate previously estimated and up from the first quarter's 3.2 percent rate.

STOCKS END MIXED ON LOWER VOLUME

Dow is Down 0.59 at 994.51 After an Early Show of Strength

By ALEXANDER E. HAMMER - Despite an early show of strength resulting from prime-rate reductions by two major banks, the stock market closed mixed yesterday in slower trading.

At the close, the Dow Jones industrial average was off 0.59 point at 994.51, its low for the day. In the previous two sessions the key barometer rose almost 16 points.

Meanwhile, advances on the New York Stock Exchange outnumbered declines by almost an 8-to-5 ratio and the exchange's index of all listed stocks finished at 56.74, its highest close since Nov. 8, 1973, when it ended at 57.40. This reflects the gradual recovery of stocks generally while the Dow average has traded within a narrow range lately.

The market's early advance occurred after Morgan Guaranty Trust and the First National Bank of Chicago announced cuts in their prime rates to 6 1/2 percent from 7 percent. They thus became the first two major banks to duplicate the reduction announced last week by the small Southwest Bank of St. Louis.

Analysts attributed the late weakness to profit-taking as the Dow approached the 1,000 level. Leonard Segel, vice president and director of research of Phillips, Appel & Walden, noted that when the

Rivalry of Steel and Aluminum Titans

PITTSBURGH—Like the cross-state rivalry of Pennsylvania's two major league baseball teams, the Philadelphia Phillies and the Pittsburgh Pirates, there has long been a friendly, though intense, competitive battle between the nation's titans of the metals business directed from their headquarters offices a block apart in this city's Golden Triangle area. In interviews with their top executives recently, it was apparent that there is considerable similarity in the current business position, future prospects, goals and economic philosophy of the United States Steel Corporation and the Aluminum Company of America, the two largest producers in their respective fields. And they continue to compete head-on in various markets, especially for the can business, where the battle is particularly fierce. But, at the moment, the aluminum outlook seems somewhat more shiny.

Big Steel, of course, is the older of the two companies by about a quarter century and is one of the venerable blue chips in American industrial and financial history. Alcoa also holds an important place in the nation's economic potential, and it too, is a prime favorite among investors.

In sales, earnings and the number of employees, however, the steel corporation towers greatly over its neighbor, and, of course, invests far greater amounts in new facilities or modernization programs each year.

At the moment, both are enjoying fairly good health and anticipating further improvement in the coming quarter and next year. In both cases, the principal reason for the satisfactory operating rate and promising outlook is the prosperity of their major customer, the auto industry. There has been one notable disparity in recent developments, however. While Alcoa and its competitors in the aluminum industry have been able to maintain almost all of a second round of SASKATOON, Saskatchewan — A year-long effort by the Canadian Government to nationalize partially the country's potash industry — largely owned by United States interests — is drawing sharp criticism on both sides of the border.

Nevertheless, the plan is moving forward, and, locally, the moderate Socialist government of this vast farming and mining province in western Canada has begun the formal takeover of one of the world's largest deposits of potash — an essential ingredient in fertilizer.

At issue in the dispute, in addition to the question of ownership of the vast potash deposits, are the interests of American growers who buy 70 percent of Canada's potash output, and the taxes, traditionally collected by the Canadian Government in Ottawa, which would be lost to Canada through nationalization.

With one major mine already purchased from its American owners for $128.5 million, of which all but $10 million is to be paid in cash and the rest in notes, the Government is well on the way toward its goal of acquiring at least 50 percent of the $800 million industry by more or less forced sale in the next few months. All financing is to be covered from a $400 million pool of provisional oil revenues.

To be clearer: Its new property, the Potash Corporation of Saskatchewan, the Government-owned company formed to implement the program, will move its headquarters here from Regina, the capital, on Oct. 1. The shift will make this quiet prairie town the future potash capital of the western world.

The official plan is that the decisions made here will guide the development of the fabulous potash lodes, containing 40 percent of the world's known reserves of the material, that lie beneath large sections of Canada's finest wheat acreage.

Elwood Cowley, the provincial secretary in charge of the potash project, has explained the acquisition of half of the Duval Mine.

By expanding the existing 10 mines and opening new ones, the Government hopes to double the present output of about 5 million tons a year by 1980. Consumers in the United States have taken

Court Rules F.T.C. May Release Ashland's Records to Congress

By WARREN WEAVER Jr. Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20—The Ashland Oil Company cannot prevent the Federal Trade Commission from giving Congress confidential information about its natural-gas holdings, a Federal appellate court ruled today. Ashland had argued against such disclosure on the grounds that the information might then become public.

Dividing 2 to 1, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia held that the law forbidding the commission from making public trade secrets furnished by corporations, did not extend to prohibiting giving the information to a Congressional committee.

If it is not reversed on appeal by the Supreme Court, today's decision could give Congress access to a wide variety of corporate information that executive branch agencies have refused to provide in the past on the grounds that the corporation wanted it kept secret.

Representative John E. Moss, chairman of the House Commerce Committee's oversight subcommittee, said he was "gratified" that Congress would now be able to obtain information about the oil company's natural-gas reserves, despite the fact that it was classed as a "trade secret."

Mr. Moss, a Democrat from California, said that the decision, "by implication" would empower Congressional committees to gain access to trade-secret information "from any other Government agency."

In an unsigned opinion, the Appellate Court declared that "no substantial showing was made that the materials in the possession of the F.T.C. will necessarily

General Tire Plans RKO Stock Spinoff; Broadcasts at Issue

By WILLIAM D. SMITH

The General Tire and Rubber Company said yesterday that it had authorized a spinoff of the capital stock of RKO GENERAL, a major affiliate with interests in radio, television, theaters and an airline.

The decision to spin off RKO stock to shareholders of General Tire revolved around the dual and sometimes overlapping questions of independence of the media and freedom of the press.

A General Tire spokesman said: "The board believes that the distribution, which would effect RKO's de jure independence from General Tire, will enable RKO to function in the broadcast area without the difficulties to which it has been subject."

Challenges to Renewal

The difficulties refer to challenges to the license renewal of RKO's Boston television station WNAC by a group called Community Broadcasting of Boston Inc. The group alleges that General Tire had bribed foreign officials for favorable treatment by foreign governments.

Last March, the Securities and Exchange Commission accused the company of keeping a secret million-dollar fund. The company subsequently acknowledged expenditures of $150,000 to a Lebanese company in two payments from 1971 to 1973 to remove General from the Arab blacklist.

The company denied any impropriety and characterized the payments as a legitimate business expense. According to people close to the situation, the management of General Tire had finally decided that the battle over the charges and the station's position were not worth the trouble as far as the shareholders and the company were concerned.

A Diversified Concern

RKO is a diversified company with 7,440 workers. It owns 13 radio stations and four television channels, a chain of 129 theaters in the Southwest, Frontier Airlines and a large cable television company in Denver.

The action, which makes RKO totally independent of General Tire, the nation's fourth-largest rubber company, is subject to approval by the Federal Communications Commission and the Securities and Exchange Commission, a tax ruling to the effect that the distribution of the RKO shares will be tax free and the listing of the RKO shares on the New York Stock Exchange.

At the same special shareholders meeting, the company announced that it had earned $32.3 million, or $1.48 a share, in its third-quarter on sales of $328.4 million, up from $18.2 million, or 82 cents a share, on sales of $472.68 million in the third quarter of 1975.

Net income for the nine-month period totaled $77.2 million, equal to $3.52 a share, compared with $42.2 million, or $1.90 a share in the nine months last year.

Taxes & Accounting

Independent auditors, who would play a much more important role as corporate watchdogs if a proposal by the Securities and Exchange Commission is imposed, are discussed in the tax column, Page 53.

Cornell C. Maier, left, of Kaiser Aluminum, says shipments should be up about 10 percent. William B. Renner of Alcoa is satisfied with the recovery's progress.

price increases put through in mid-August, United States Steel and the rest of the steel industry had to rescind a smaller set of increases on a major product line announced around the same time.

Why the different pricing experiences? There are two reasons, basically. One relates to the state of the respective markets for the two metals, where the degree of variation lately has widened somewhat. But the other reason may have been more crucial—the timing of the effective dates for the higher prices of the two metals.

PRIME IS CUT TO 6 1/2% BY MORGAN GUARANTY AND FIRST OF CHICAGO

OTHER BIG BANKS STAY AT 7%

Many Expected to Await Decision on Friday by Citibank—Fed's Open Market Body Meets Today

By TERRY ROBARDS

Two of the nation's largest banks, the Morgan Guaranty Trust Company of New York and the First National Bank of Chicago, announced quarter-point reductions yesterday in their prime lending rates, signaling a decline in business borrowing costs.

No other major banks immediately followed with reductions of their own, although one smaller institution, the Manufacturers Bank in Los Angeles, also cut its base lending rate to 6 1/2 percent from 7 percent. Many banks were expected to await a decision from Citibank, which often leads the way in prime rate changes.

Citibank, the largest commercial bank in New York, usually considers prime rate changes each Friday morning. Thus, a split rate was considered likely to prevail within the banking industry at least until the end of this week.

Reflected in Other Rates

The prime is the minimum charge on loans to the most creditworthy corporate borrowers. Most other bank lending charges are scaled upward from the prime, which means a sustained trend in the prime rate can eventually be reflected in most other borrowing rates.

The downward pressure on the prime rate in recent weeks has resulted from a general easing of rates throughout the credit markets. Meanwhile, market analysts suggest that a further easing in monetary policy may be initiated shortly by the Federal Reserve. This would create additional pressures for rate cuts.

The Federal Reserve Open Market Committee is scheduled to meet today in Washington to chart its monetary policy for the coming month against a backdrop of money supply growth that has been somewhat slower than anticipated. An easing in monetary policy could be justified to encourage a faster growth rate in the money supply.

No Tightening Seen Likely

The cuts in the prime rate announced by Morgan and First National of Chicago were made not only in view of the recent declines in money market rates but also in anticipation that Federal Reserve policy could be relaxed as a result of today's committee meeting. At worst, say analysts, no tightening of Fed policy is likely.

Supporting this view was a decline of $1.7 billion in the basic money supply, known as M-1, in the latest reporting week. The decline surprised many analysts and brought the growth rate in M-1 well below the Fed's announced target range.

"Certainly, prospects for a near-term Fed easing to restimulate monetary growth are strengthened by indications that the average M-1 level in September could fall well below earlier Fed estimates and targets," said Aubrey G. Lanston & Company yesterday in its weekly credit markets commentary.

"Little Reason for any Change"

"Though the economy remains fundamentally sound and offers little reason for any change in current monetary policy," said Glenn C. Ficou of the Irving Trust Company, the weakness in the monetary aggregates since the last Open Market Committee meeting "will do no doubt prompt the committee to review the case for easing credit conditions."

Citibank could have initiated a prime rate reduction as early as three weeks ago, when its formula first suggested that a cut could be justified. However, the formula called for a rate roughly between 7 percent and 6 1/2 percent, so the bank chose to stay at the higher level—a decision that would tend to mean greater profitability in lending.

Meanwhile, the rate on commercial paper, which Citibank uses in its prime rate formula, has edged downward. Since commercial paper represents an alternate form of business borrowing, the pressure on banks to lower their prime rates has increased.

At the same time, loan demand has remained sluggish, further adding to the pressure for a general prime rate cut. Commercial and industrial loans at least

Market Place Analysis of I.T.T. Bid for Carbon

By ROBERT METZ

Carbon Industries, a West Virginia coal company that the International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation over the weekend said it would buy, opened after a delay yesterday at 28 on accumulated orders for 13,200 shares for an explosive gain over Friday's closing price on the American Stock Exchange of 22 1/2.

By the end of the day, 142,700 Carbon shares had traded, making the stock twice as active as its nearest Amer rival, and the price was 38 1/2, up 13 1/2.

Such was the excitement over I.T.T.'s generous proposal that shares of Falcon Seaboard, another coal producer, gained 2 on the Amex to close at 26 1/2 on a 53,900-share turnover.

Meanwhile, in over-the-counter trading, shares of Westmoreland Coal ended the day at 58 1/2 bid, up from Friday's 56 1/2.

Carbon Industries received of about 120 million tons of coal, two-thirds of which is metallurgical and the rest steam.

"At the most, figure $1 a ton and that is wild imagination," he added. "Use that figure and you get a value of $120 million. Add Carbon's book value of $69 million and you get a quick appraisal of $190 million. It's very hard to justify anything over $200 million, then, and I.T.T. is paying $250 million."

By contrast, Mr. Price analyzed the earlier purchase of Y. & O. Coal by Pan Handle Eastern Pipe Line, which paid $76 million for Y. & O.'s 400 million tons of steam coal.

"If you figure 10 cents a ton [for the cheaper steam coal] that's $40 million," Mr. Price said. "The company's book value was $50 million and that adds up to $90 million. That's $15 million more than Y. & O. got."

Mr. Price wondered whether I.T.T. might be analyzing Carbon in terms of its excellent earnings of $4.39 a share in 1975, since the $11.4 billion conglomerate's offer would amount to only 11 times that figure. That would still rank above the highest earnings multiples in the industry, he said.

"This is super for anyone who owns Carbon Industries," Mr. Price added. "For its part, I.T.T. would be getting a clean balance sheet—long-term debt was just $7.7 million at the end of last year, then Carbon had $47 million in cash and equivalents."

By ELIZABETH M. FOWLER Holders of long positions in cocoa futures, discouraged about prospects for further strength after a recent sharp rise, sold heavily yesterday. Prices dropped the limit in some months in trading on the New York Cocoa Exchange.

For example, December delivery cocoa closed at $1.06 49/100 a pound, down 4 cents.

Even the fact that Gill & Duffus, a large British house specializing in cocoa, published figures Friday confirming poor African crop conditions failed to bolster prices. "It was old news," an analyst explained, adding that speculators also were not paying attention to a report that the Dutch cocoa grind had declined.

Cocoa prices have been at record highs recently, leading to a strong expectation that Hershey Foods, the leading chocolate maker, will cut the size of its chocolate bars soon. Cocoa is ground to become the main ingredient of chocolate bars, which generally also contain sugar and flavorings.

Sugar futures, which have been in the doldrums recently, rose a little in price on the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange. The October contract closed at 8.30 cents a pound, up from 7.98.

"We've got a serious situation in sugar," an analyst commented, pointing out that a large supply overhang the market. "How low is likely to be asked. The American sugar beet industry cannot make money at these levels and they probably need 12 cents a pound sugar to break even. Why, even the paper bags that sugar comes in cost the equivalent of about a cent a pound."

There was a time during the sugar shortage two years ago that sugar sold as high as 66 cents a pound.

market approached 1,000 institutions, the dominant factor, took profits and moved to the sidelines, trading of stocks listed on the exchange fell to 26.14 million shares from 32.61 million shares on Friday.

A late report by the Commerce Department of a faster-than-expected rise in the second-quarter real gross national product, corporate after-tax profits and prices did little to spur investor buying.

The biggest loser yesterday was Texas Instruments, which tumbled 7 1/2 to 77 1/2 in brisk trading. The company disclosed that its earnings, which had shown consistent gains since 1971, would be down this year from the $6.42 a share netted in 1975.

William L. Wearty, chairman of the manufacturer of compressors and mining equipment, said, "We were very optimistic in the first half of the year but things haven't worked out the way we thought they would." He also disclosed that the company planned to lay off 1,000 workers.

Turnover on the Big Board dropped to 21.73 million shares from 28.27 million shares on Friday.

The most actively traded issue was Sony, which rose 1/4 to 9 1/2 on a 307,700-share volume, including three blocks totaling 186,100 shares. The electronics company reported that its profits in the July quarter rose 60 cents a share from 8 cents a year earlier.

International Business Machines closed at a 1976 high and rose 1/4 to 284 1/2. The stock traded as high as 286 1/2 before falling back. The issue has been strong recently following reports that it will soon introduce its program to enter the minicomputer industry.

General Tire and Rubber tacked on 1/2 to 25 1/2. The company reported higher third-quarter profits and said its directors had approved the spinoff of its RKO General unit.

Bonds Decline Despite Prime Utility Issue Is Offered at 8

By JOHN H. ALLAN

The trend toward lower interest rates faltered yesterday as the key Federal funds rate stayed close to 5 1/2 percent and bond traders seemed to become less convinced that the Federal Reserve would decide today to ease monetary policy.

Bond prices declined even though the influential Morgan Guaranty Trust Company decided to reduce interest rates on corporate loans.

The setback in the credit markets, however, did not take place until after an issue of high-grade utility bonds was offered to investors at a yield of 8.35 percent, the lowest rate of return for such securities since February 1974.

The new bond, issued by the Baltimore Gas and Electric Company, sold slowly. Against this background, the Treasury prepared to sell $2 1/2 billion of two-year notes today, and the New Jersey Bell Telephone Company got set to sell $100 million of 40-year bonds.

With the credit market's decline yesterday, the yields on both issues will doubtless be slightly higher than they would have been last Friday, when fixed-income issues were advancing strongly, some dealers suggested. Nevertheless, the yields on both the Treasury notes and the Bell System bonds will be well below rates on similar issues offered to investors in recent months.

The Treasury's 6 1/2% of Aug. 30, 1976, declined in price yesterday enough to raise their yield to 6.28 percent from 6.22 percent Friday. Using this issue as a gauge, some Treasury securities dealers suggested the new two-year notes to be sold today would yield 6.30 percent to 6.35 percent.

For the small investor, this yield is not likely to prove attractive. Two-year certificates issued by savings banks currently give an effective yield of 6.81 percent.

Last Friday, Treasury bond dealers generally predicted that the notes to be sold today would be given a 6 1/2 percent interest coupon. Yesterday, that estimate was raised to 6 1/4 percent, a rate that nevertheless would be below the 6 1/2 percent rate set last month on the 6 1/2% of July.

As a measure of what the New Jersey Bell issue might yield, investment bankers pointed to the Illinois Bell Telephone Company 8 1/4% of 2016, which were offered late yesterday at a price to yield 8.14 percent.

With this rate in mind, some investment bankers predicted the New Jersey issue Construction at Valdez, Alaska, the southern terminal of the pipeline that will carry oil from the North Slope of the 1973 law that authorized an oil pipeline from Prudhoe Bay to Valdez.

Although described as 80 percent complete, that 800-mile pipeline may be unable to start carrying oil on schedule late next year because of unresolved safety problems and possible delays in terminal construction.
Congress authorized the pipeline after being told by the Administration and the oil industry that Prudhoe Bay oil would be consumed on the West Coast. Now, it appears that there will be a large West Coast surplus of up to 800,000 barrels a day by 1980, and more later as production rises to 1.6 million barrels a day.

Senate Hearings Due Today
According to the industry and the Administration, the surplus results from the big 1974 jump in oil prices and the resulting slowdown in the growth of consumption, plus the start in July 1976 of commercial production at the Elk Hills Naval Petroleum Reserve in California.

The Senate Interior Committee is expected to hold hearings today on the whole issue.
Sohio plans to build a 200-mile pipeline across California to join with an 800-mile El Paso Natural Gas Company line from the Arizona border to Midland, Tex., El Paso has applied to the Federal Power Commission for permission to stop its intermittent use of the line in order to lease it to Sohio. The energy agency is expected to support the application. California is expected to oppose it.
California officials contend that Washington does not appreciate the severity of the air-pollution problem in southern California and that Federal energy officials are too sympathetic to Sohio.
Introducing a partisan note, Eli Cher-now, a special assistant to Governor Brown, said in an interview: "It's hard to believe that Jimmy Carter would be as sympathetic to every claim of the oil companies as the Federal Energy Administration and the Interior Department have been. Sohio asserts its interest. The F.E.A. seems to accept that as in the national interest without questioning whether the national interest might call for something else."

Mr. Zarb, the F.E.A.'s head, retorted:
"I represent the agency, and I say that's nonsense."
Quoting Democratic Assemblyman
Charles Warren, Mr. Chernow said:
"What we have here is essentially a marketing problem for one company." Sohio.
Mr. Zarb said that in a July 29 meeting with Mr. Chernow and Mr. Quinn, the chairman of the Air Resources Board, he told them: "I was going to keep my mind open." Mr. Zarb also said that his agency's draft report on the problem would be sent to California and other states

"for discussion."
The California officials have said they could not license unloading of big tank-ers from Alaska unless Washington wrote regulations adequate to protect the South Coast Air Basin.
"That might be feasible, Mr. Zarb said,
"if their requirements are rational and reasonable. I want to see specifically what they are."
Federal officials say California's professed fears may be the opening gambit in a state-Federal negotiation to get more natural gas for California, either from existing fields in Texas and New Mexico or from a possible overland natural gas pipeline from Prudhoe Bay.

Senate Fails to Act on Bill to Let S.E.C. Set Standards for Advisers

By ROBERT D. HERSHEY Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20—A controversial bill that would have given the Securities and Exchange Commission authority to set standards of competence and financial responsibility for investment advisers floundered today when the Senate, less than two weeks from its target adjournment date, failed to take it up.
The Senate also apparently killed for this session three less controversial banking measures when it voted, without debate, to table them.

These bills involved additional supervisory powers for bank regulators, the selection and terms of Federal Reserve officials and the payment of interest on Government deposits in commercial banks.
The banking legislation, except for the bill dealing with interest on public deposits, represented most of what remained from a huge package of legislation that was introduced last winter and greatly stripped down before being passed by the House in the spring.

Its near-certain demise means that the outcry that resulted from disclosures of so-called problem banks led in the end to virtually no legislation.
A plan to combine bank regulation in a single Federal agency was an early casualty in the House, and the banking bills that emerged produced little controversy. Today's developments were mainly a result of lack of support rather than strenuous opposition.

The S.E.C.-sponsored investment advisers' bill, however, was debated with heat and, according to the commission, misrepresented by several publications and legislators who asserted that newspaper and magazine writers would be required to register with the commission if they discussed the stock market.

But the commission has repeatedly said this was not its intention; nor did it now plan to exercise any authority to administer tests of advisers' competence.
In a speech to securities administrators in Chicago today, Roderick M. Hills, chairman of the S.E.C., asked, "Is it too much to ask that investment advisers know what the rules are, [and] when an investment adviser does have discretionary control over a client's money, should we not at least consider the need for minimum capital requirements comparable to those required of broker-dealers?"

A significant reason for the bill's failure was the fact that 18 amendments had been attached, further threatening its quick disposition.
The public deposits bill would have allowed Federal state and local governments to earn interest on checking accounts one year after enactment. During that year a study would be conducted on the impact of permitting banks to pay interest on all checking accounts.
Proposition dropped from legislation by the House last spring.

Trading tax deductions by trading in municipals.

exempt income isn't the only tax benefit municipals can give ... Because very often by trading municipals you can create deductions and retain money you would otherwise have to
... in taxes.

If you have capital gains this year, now is the time to think
... ut reducing or eliminating the taxes due on those gains by
... swapping municipal bonds.

Because with municipals there are so many different
... as and shapes that the buy and sell can be done simulta-
... ously, creating paper losses, while replacing your bond with
... almost identical one.

And this is an opportune time to sell bonds that do not
... your investment objectives and buy bonds that do, be... cause you can restructure your portfolio and take advantage of
... deductions at the same time.

Auditors Judge Internal Controls?

By ROBERT J. COLE

Auditors will soon be more important watch-dogs against illegal or im- proper activities if a pro- vision is getting serious Securities and Exchange S imposed.

Mr. Burton, the newly named chief accountant of the commission, said in an interview that the commission, as a part of its massive invest- igation into the quality of internal controls, is now reviewing the disbursement of the normal account- ing system to indicate corporate internal con- trols, he said, "is for assets."

As a matter of good outside auditors already ment whenever they find of sloppy internal con- trols, because Federal law auditors report on any deficiencies they find in loans associations and is.

What would Mr. Burton, if he were still with the S.E.C., like to see? Mr. Burton offered two ways to re- solve the problem. One might be a statement by a company's auditors that he said went something like this: "We have reviewed the internal controls of this company and in our judgment the system is adequate." The other might include the phrase, "There were no material deficiencies."

Still thinking of the public, Mr. Burton said that what he envisioned was "an evaluation to determine whether or not there's a significant problem for the investor."

New Bill Would Require Taxpayer Notification

The Internal Revenue Service has been regarded by taxpayers as some- what overreaching in digging into bank records for evidence of mischief, even when it doesn't have very much to go on.

The new tax bill will require that whenever the I.R.S. summons a bank or other third party to provide finan- cial records on a taxpayer, the I.R.S. must also notify the taxpayer—in ad- vance.

In the past, taxpayers were often unaware that their records were being sought until after the I.R.S. had ob- tained them.

The new provision calls for the service to tell the taxpayer what's going on—and grant him the right to take legal action to block release of his records without his permission.

According to one leading tax prac- titioner, "The taxpayer is entitled to complete privacy and no one should be permitted to snoop unless there's a real reason."

943,000 Delinquents Found by I.R.S. in '75

Anthony L. Conrad, dismissed last week as chairman of the RCA Corpora- tion, is only the most recent exam- ple of persons who failed to file Federal income tax returns.

The Internal Revenue Service, which says it does not know exactly how many fail to file, on its own brought in 815,000 delinquent returns in 1972,

John C. Burton, former chief accountant of the S.E.C. and now Deputy Mayor of New York City for Finance, discussed new S.E.C. rule.

Figures do not include the casual late filer—even those as tardy as two or three months. They cover only those that the I.R.S. itself asked to file.

On the basis of $4 million individual returns in 1975, 943,000 who had to be forced to file would represent about 1 percent of the total.

Chase Manhattan Accepts Finding By S.E.C. on Inadequate Controls

The Chase Manhattan Corporation, which two years ago reported a $34 million securities trading overvaluation of the Chase Manhattan Bank, agreed yesterday to a Securities and Exchange Commission finding that the bank's controls at the time were inadequate.

The bank has since revised its controls so as to obtain independent verification of trading account valuations.

Losses in the securities trading account, shown at $10.3 million, ought to have been shown as losses of $37.8 million.

Corrections were filed with the S.E.C. in mid-November 1974, the agency said.

In defense, Chase asked the S.E.C. to take into consideration the fact that the senior vice president, whose resignation had been accepted at the time, had been recognized in the bond business "as among the foremost in competence and integrity."

Both the Chase and Mr. Farber accepted the settlement without admitting or deny- ing the charges.

The discrepancy, uncovered by the Chase in an audit of the trading account, was reported to the S.E.C. ON Oct. 2, 1974, and announced in a news release the same day. David Rockefeller, chair- man of the bank, commented at the time that "extremely serious errors of judg- ment" had been made.

Correction Filed

In settlement of the administrative pro- ceeding, the S.E.C. said the Chase's re- ports, subsequently all corrected, had been deficient as follows:

Net income for the quarter ended March 31, 1974, was overstated by $6.5 million, or by about 18 percent. The re- sulting increase of 10 cents a share over the 1973 quarter ought to have been a decrease of 11 cents a share. Trading ac- count losses for the period, reported at $7.5 million, ought to have been shown at $22.2 million.

Net income for the six months ended June 30, 1974, was overstated by $12.4 million, or about 17 percent. A reported increase of 30 cents a share over the year before ought to have been shown as a decline in net income of 9 cents

BORG-WARNER UNIT RAISES PRICES OF CHEMICALS 6%

The chemicals unit of the Borg-Warner Corporation announced price increases yesterday of certain products in its poly- mer additive chemicals line by 6 percent.

The increases, that affect about two- thirds of the company's products marketed under the trade name, Weston, are effective next Sunday, and range from 2 to 15 cents a pound.

Price increases averaging 5 percent for the cast iron and ductile iron pressure pipe produced at its Florence, N.J., plant were announced yesterday by the Griffin Pipe Products Company, a division of Amsted Industries. This is the first in- crease made at the plant since May 1974, the company said.

The Cabot Corporation will raise prices for certain carbon blacks 6 percent in- stead of 8 percent as previously planned. The smaller increase is more in line with the raise planned by competitors, a com- pany spokesman said.

Broker Firm Agrees to Acquisition

Herzfeld & Stern, a 96-year-old New York stock brokerage firm, said yesterday that it had agreed in principle to acquire Black Stein Kimball Inc., a Paramus, N. J., broker. Paul A. Cohen, senior partner of Herzfeld, said the deal in- volved an undisclosed amount of cash.

Ownership and Taxes Disputed as Plan for the Partial Nationalization of Canadian Potash Is Criticized

 the output. Industry earnings were estimated officially at $100 million in taxes. Oppose Project
 The plan is the action in the role of American capital in the country that will follow. This is the view of the New Democratic Party, which is now in power in that province. Canadian Citizens
 The Canadian Potash Producers Association and senior vice president for marketing of the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company Ltd., a major producer, estimated last year that provincial and Federal taxes together took 83 percent of the profit on potash, which he said was "the highest tax load imposed on any Canadian industry."

World Shortage Foreseen
 Leading potash companies have refused to submit financial statements demanded by the Government and have filed several lawsuits challenging the constitutionality of special taxes levied on the industry. They also seek the return of $200-million in taxes already paid.
 The Government, meanwhile, charges that the companies still owe $31.7 million in taxes due at the end of last year.
 The price of potash, which had sunk to less than $20 a ton in 1969, had recovered to $73 a ton by last Sept. 1. The Government has quoted experts as predicting that a world shortage of potash early in the next decade will send the price to $100 a ton.
 With the improvement of prices, officials said, minimum price rules adopted at the industry's request in 1969 have become obsolete. The regulations have led to the prosecution of eight American companies by the Department of Justice on price-fixing charges, now pending in a Chicago court.
 Canadians were incensed when the charges listed a number of Saskatchewan politicians and civil servants as "unindicted co-conspirators." Premier Blakeney and others have denounced the naming of the Canadians in the suits as an unjustified reaction to policies that were entirely legal under Canadian law, if not in the United States.
 Legislative action bringing the province into the industry was triggered by the cancellation or postponement of scheduled expansion worth $200 million pending a settlement of the monetary dispute with the Government, according to provincial authorities.
 The new policy was announced last November. By January, two bills putting the province in the potash mining business, passed by the Legislature in which Premier Blakeney's New Democratic Party holds a strong majority, had become law.
 In its first $128.5 million purchase, announced on Aug. 12, the new corporation acquired a major mine six miles west of Saskatoon from the Duval Corporation of Canada, a subsidiary of the Pennzoil Company, based in Houston, Texas. The enterprise, now called the "Duval Mine," will be given a Canadian name to be announced at the ceremony when the new proprietors take over formally on Oct. 19, said David Dombrowsky, the president of the Government corporation.
 "Instead of getting just 50 percent of the industry, why don't you take it all?" an interviewer asked Elwood Cowley, the provincial secretary in charge of the potash project.
 "We just want enough ownership to be a power in the market, and 50 percent is enough to accomplish that objective," said Mr. Cowley, a 32-year-old former high school history and mathematics teacher.

An indecisive market is no excuse for indecisive planning.

Earlier this year, an economy which had been sifting developed vigorously improved vital signs. But many investors became apprehensive, deciding that inflation fever would return. Then when economic moderation did occur, many feared the patient might be dying. A more consistent investor, less subject to short-term jitters, may well find today the optimum time to act. Sound values, probable dividend increases and good growth prospects do exist. The Kidder, Peabody strategy report for September is especially relevant. It isolates an industry and selected issues therein whose stock prices, we believe, have not yet reacted to the improving outlook for the industry, and currently appear poised to do so in strength. Send for your copy of our informative report today. It's a tool for decisive planning.

Soviet Union Narrowed Trade Deficit With West By 25% for 2d Quarter

MOSCOW, Sept. 20 (UPI)—The Soviet Union registered a trade deficit with the West of nearly $3 billion in the first half of this year...

Soviet statistics showed today. But the deficit narrowed in the second quarter. More than half the deficit, $1.5 billion, was in trade with the United States...

of the second-quarter deficit by about 25 percent—$467 million—was noteworthy, but that it was too early to tell if the figures indicated Soviet Union retrenchment on foreign trade markets.

Next Move for New York Lottery

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY

The next step in the advertising for the Empire State's new and apparently successful lottery, will be to run newspaper ads showing the number of winners in various localities and maybe even listing their names.

"What makes the new lottery exciting is that there are a lot of winners," explained Norman Goluskin, president of Smith/Greenland, which won the lottery account in the early summer.

In November there will be a new game with new advertising to go with it, to be followed by a return to the instant game going on now.

"You have to constantly change the game to keep up interest," Mr. Goluskin noted.

Although newspapers are the lottery's major medium—about 50 of them are used throughout the state—the $1.5 million budget for advertising and public relations is also being used in television and radio as well as in subways, buses and transit terminals. Newspapers are favored, Mr. Goluskin said, because of their flexibility.

The current advertising is pretty much the campaign the agency suggested when it was seeking the account last June against some pretty heavy weight competition. It had also suggested the name Empire Stakes to appeal to New Yorkers.

Smith/Greenland entered the competition armed with the experience it had gained promoting gasoline station games for Getty and as the agency for the Brandywine Raceway in Delaware. Its people also did a lot of homework on lotteries generally and backed that up with research into consumer attitudes.

Leo Greenland, the chairman, and Mr. Goluskin, who made their presentation in Albany, also suggested the line: "Where no one has a better chance than you."

The account was won on July 7 and after a brief pause for jubilation (allowed to all winners) the agency faced the pressure of meeting the client's inflexible timetable.

A logo had to be designed (Herb Lubalin did it); a kit with a slew of point-of-sale material had to be prepared and sent to agents by Aug. 23, and an ad to recruit new agents had to be made and placed.

Then came the teaser advertising campaign for the newspapers and the regular print and broadcasting that had to be ready to go Sept. 7. The agency, and in particular Paul Jarvis, the art director, and Marc Shenfield, the copywriter, had a very busy summer.

Of course, it's easier for advertising people to write about winning and losing than it is for most folks.

Sharp Opens Campaign

The Sharp Electronics Corporation, the United States marketing arm of the Japanese manufacturer, is beginning this week the first major consumer advertising campaign for its color television sets, microwave ovens and citizen band radios. By the end of the year it expects to spend $3 million to $4 million. Last year's budget was only about $800,000.

The agency that is taking the company into this wonderful quest for consumer identification is Isidore Lefkowitz Elgort, which was assigned the business last spring. At the time they said that Sharp had big plans, but not everyone believed them.

Almost all national advertising for the three product lines will be in spot television, which will be supported by cooperative advertising in newspapers.

C.B. radios, because of their very nature, will also be promoted with radio advertising.

The television ads will run in markets where Sharp has the best distribution and the best chance for successful selling. The ovens will get the widest exposure in 62 markets—while the radios and color television sets will each be promoted in about 25 markets.

None of the commercials will try to sell the benefits of the product categories. All will focus on specific consumer benefits of the Sharp brands. The overall theme—"Sharp, the one to watch."

An exception to Sharp's reluctance to advertise has been its line of calculators, handled by a different agency, Wisser & Sanchez. Count on them.

Thompson Quits RCA

The J. Walter Thompson Company, once RCA's major agency, yesterday quit its last assignment, the corporate advertising account. It is down to a budget of about $700,000 this year and Thompson noted, "after careful review, it foresees a limited financial future in continuing to handle the account."

The agency had worked for RCA for 18 years. It lost the black and white television set advertising last year and the color sets and Banquet Foods subsidiary this year.

The Thompson move is "absolutely not" related to the tax problems of Anthony L. Conrad, the ousted chairman of RCA, according to Don Johnston, president of the agency. The agency's decision was made a couple of weeks ago, and the timing was forced by a desire to give 90 days' notice before the end of the year, Mr. Johnston said.

A Book of Jingles

Have you ever heard of a collection of sheet music entirely devoted to advertising jingles? Would you believe it if you heard it? Well, here it is: "Great Songs of Madison Avenue," edited by Peter Norback, 32 years old, and his brother, Craig, 29.

Within its soft covers are the words to 114 old and new favorites, starting with "Have You Tried Wheaties?" and including Miller's "If You've Got the Time We've Got the Beer," "I Wish Were an Oscar Mayer Wiener" and Wrigley's "Double Your Pleasure."

The last jingle in the $7.95 book is one used to promote home delivery of The New York Times. It is introduced with "Now a word from our sponsor . . ." A clever way of letting you know that the book, which is coming out Friday, is being published by Quadrangle/The New York Times Company.

Magazine Ads Climb

In August the magazine industry continued to romp happily up the comeback trail, with member publications of the Publishers Information Bureau recording a 23 percent increase in ad revenues and a 21 percent increase in ad pages compared with August last year.

It turned out to be the best August in magazine history. Revenues were estimated at $101 million and pages stood at 5,989.

Marathon Oil Buys All the Stock of Ecol For $140 Million

The Marathon Oil Company announced yesterday that it had bought all the stock of Ecol Ltd., for $140 million in cash.

Ecol is a wholly owned subsidiary of the Energy Corporation of Louisiana, Ltd., which has a 200,000 barrel-a-day refinery under construction at Garyville, La. Marathon, a middle ranking producer and marketer of petroleum products, said most of the new refinery's crude oil supply and production output had been contracted under long and short-term arrangements.

The Energy Corporation of Louisiana is owned jointly by the Ingram Corporation and the Northeast Petroleum Corporation.

Cornat Industries Sets Plan To Buy Control of Versatile

Cornat Industries, Ltd., Vancouver, Canada, announced yesterday that it planned to buy an effective control of Versatile Manufacturing, a Winnipeg-based farm machinery maker, for $28 million in cash.

In late 1975, the Canadian Government blocked a move by the Hesston Corporation, a Kansas farm machinery concern, to acquire Versatile. The move by Cornat, a diversified Canadian company does not require Government approval, it was noted.

To acquire effective control of Versatile, Cornat is buying 488,366 common voting shares, or 52.3 percent, as well as 674,819, or 33 percent of the Class A non-voting shares. This would give Cornat almost 39 percent of Versatile.

Cornat, in turn, is controlled by Canadian Forest Products, Ltd., Last week, Cornat bought just over 50 percent of the stock in Bralorne Resources, Ltd., Calgary, for $17 million. As for Versatile Manufacturing it cleared $14.6 million in 1975 on sales of $101 million, of which 60 percent came from the United States.

Loram Plans to Buy Canadian Oil Company

The Loram Company, a holding concern, intends to buy Western Decalita Petroleum Ltd., a Canadian oil and gas producer, for $64 million, it was announced yesterday in Calgary, Alberta.

Under terms of the deal, a unit of Loram would pay $8 for each of Western Decalita's 8.2 million shares, provided at least 90 percent of them were tendered by Oct. 22.

Actually, Loram already has an option to buy Hudson Bay's 2.9 million Western Decalita shares for $33 million, along with $5 million of the oil and gas producer's convertible debentures and $1.3 of income debentures.

Amax Unit to Purchase 2 Timber and Land Units

Amax Inc., the large minerals producer, announced yesterday that its subsidiary, Amax Forest Products Inc., was buying two Florida timber and land companies for roughly $19.5 million of its shares, as well as assume certain liabilities of the acquired concerns.

According to the purchase plan, the subsidiary will acquire Coastal Timberland Inc., and Liberty Forest Products Inc., for $40,000 Amax Inc., common stock and some properties owned by Amax Forest Products.

The Amax Inc. statement did not disclose the amount of liabilities to be assumed by its subsidiary. But based on the closing price for Amax Inc., shares on the New York Stock Exchange yesterday—$57.25, up 25 cents on the day—the $40,000 shares to be paid would be worth about $19.5 million.

Weight Watchers to Add Weight Controllers

Weight Watchers International Inc., said yesterday that it was acquiring the assets of Weight Controllers, which operates slimming studios in five European countries, but would not discuss the purchase price or other details. Weight Watchers International operates in most Western European lands.

Corporation Affairs

Gillette Reports 'Illegal' Payments Over

The Gillette Company disclosed yesterday that unidentified "foreign units of the company" had made "certain illegal or questionable" payments in foreign countries amounting to $400,000 from 1972 to 1975.

The company, based in Boston, did not identify the foreign countries. The payments were discovered during an investigation by a committee of Gillette directors. According to Gillette, the investigation found that "all or part" of the payments "may have been paid to government officials" in the foreign countries.

The Gillette committee concluded that possible payments to government officials abroad were not "political." It appeared that most of them had probably been made to facilitate administrative procedures rather than influence political decisions.

Gillette said the internal investigation did not find any illegal political payments made in the United States or in any foreign country. It did not find any questionable payments to United States government officials.

Castle & Cooke Unit's Bid For a Ship Is Successful

Castle & Cooke Inc. disclosed that a subsidiary, Intercontinental Transport Services Ltd., successfully bid $7 million for the Sabrecore, a refrigerated cargo vessel that was auctioned in Tokyo by court order.

The company said the purchase, subject to confirmation by a Japanese court later this week, brought to four the number of refrigerated cargo vessels it had purchased this year.

G. E. Research Center Gets a Battery Contract

The General Electric Research and Development Center, Schenectady, N. Y., said it had received a $2.5 million contract from the Electric Power Research Institute to develop a superbattery that could be used by electric utilities for bulk-energy storage.

The institute has provided support for General Electric's battery research project since 1973. According to G.E., the new project is aimed at developing a rechargeable sodium-sulfur storage battery with a potential of five times more storage capacity a pound than a standard lead-acid battery.

Sherwin Sees Peso Charge

The Sherwin Williams Company reported that the floating and effective devaluation of the Mexican peso would result in a currency conversion charge of slightly more than $3 million, or 60 cents a share, against its consolidated fiscal 1976 earnings. Walter O. Spencer, chairman, said the decision to float the peso would probably have no direct effect on the paint company's Mexican operations, which include a coatings plant and 74 company-operated stores.

Holiday Inns to Sell 4 Caribbean Properties

Commonwealth Holiday Inns of Canada Ltd., a subsidiary of Holiday Inns Inc., announced that it had decided to sell its properties on Antigua, St. Lucia, Grenada and Barbados in the Caribbean where, the company said, its operations had been unprofitable in recent years.

The company said the Holiday Inn at Antigua had already been sold. Commonwealth Holiday said that it planned to write down its investment in the four island operations resulting in an extraordinary loss of about $3.5 million after tax recovery to reflect more accurately the present market value of the investment and to provide for losses expected during the period leading to final disposal.

Ingersoll-Rand Plans Layoff of 1,000 Workers

WOODCLIFF LAKE, N. J., Sept. 20 (UPI)—The Ingersoll-Rand Corporation said today it expected to trim its 46,000-member working force by about 1,000 by the year-end because of lagging market recovery rates of some of its product lines. The maker of air and gas compressors said the layoffs would be widely scattered at various plants and staggered over the last three months of the year. Number of layoffs may be employee attrition, the company said. Ingersoll-Rand has a working force rapidly in years, but William L. W. man, said earnings for the year would be down despite record in soil-Rand order bookings of the first half. He said probably be around $1.9 billion, up from $1.7 billion in 1975. The company said it would be up $200 million year but short of the sales expected earlier.

Harris to Build Communication

Harris Corporation said an agreement to build satellite communications for the Government of the Sudan. The company said it valued at $1 billion an option for a 5 percent of the initial system.

T.W.A. Seeks Fare

Trans World Airlines is with the Civil Aeronautics Board for a proposed inter-lantic fare increase that would be effective for the winter Nov. 1 to March 31, 1977. TWA is seeking an 11 percent from last winter's so-called normal economy 10 percent increase in eight-day fares. First-class fares would be unchanged.

I.B.M. and Sperry

The International Business Machines Corp. and the Sperry Rand Corporation mated bids to provide a $40 million contract and reservation system, the government-owned Olympic is expected to be on the contract by the end of the year.

Raytheon Gets Contract

The Raytheon Service subsidiary of the Raytheon Co. has received approval from N. Y. county judges to construct phase 2 of the capital goods recovery facility. The project has been appropriated with about $15 million from the New York State of Environmental Conservation.

Steel and Aluminum Titans, R Show Similar Prospects and steel was to have taken effect a considerable time after the announcement—an unusually long 45 days.

The steel industry is enjoying a good year, though hardly a sensational one. Shipments are running some 18 percent above the severely depressed level of 1975, but customer inventories may have been a bit heavier than steel men believed. There is, moreover, a fairly large amount of idle steelmaking capacity at present.

The aluminum situation is quite different. Alcoa executives believe that consumer inventories, on the basis of the latest quarterly survey of 200 major customers, have not been excessive this year and, as one put it, "we have seen no evidence of any great accumulation during the third quarter."

Alcoa executives and other aluminum officials estimate that this year's shipments of aluminum by the industry will show a gain of some 30 percent over 1975 and come within 5 percent of the 14.7 billion pounds shipped in the record year, 1973.

While steel mills have been running around 80 percent of capacity recently, Alcoa is already up to 84 percent, and the rest of the aluminum industry is running around 90 percent. All say the rate is heading higher.

Unlike the steel companies, which are laying off some workers because of the slowness of orders for capital goods, the aluminum companies all assert that they are still recalling workers or hiring new ones.

As for 1977, most aluminum executives seem to be in agreement with the tentative estimate of Cornell C. Maier, president of Kaiser Aluminum, who said the other day that he believed that the industry's shipments "should be up somewhere around 10 percent over those of this year." Alcan Aluminum, however, is a little less optimistic, estimating a 5 percent increase in its United States sales next year.

William B. Renner, president of Alcoa, said his company would have virtually all of its basic smelting capacity in use by the end of the year. The major exception, he said, would be the high-cost facilities in Point Comfort, Texas, which use expensive natural gas as the energy supply for the smelting process. Alcoa's rate is expected to be up round the 90 percent level by the year-end.

"Our major markets appear pretty sound and pretty good, particularly in the transportation and packaging industries," Mr. Renner said. "We are quite satisfied with the way the recovery is going and are optimistic as we look down the road. We haven't seen any turnup in the capital-goods market, but that isn't such a major factor for us. Our big concern now is the degree of change that might come in Washington after the election."

Steel executives are also pleased with their consumer business, especially the tonnages being taken by the automotive industry, but frankly disappointed by the capital-goods area, which will not develop its strength until next year.

Steel's recent fiasco front has baffled many of its own executives, as well as customers. The latter thing was wrong, coming the June price increase products and while uncertain over a possible strike in industry.

The other negative for price increase was the fact before it was due to go it was an infrequent point and one that is not like peated.

Lewis W. Foy, chairman Bethlehem Steel Corporation as far as he was concerned price increase by his or not be announced that w steel company executive time there would be no 30-day notice.

One thing is almost a current thinking of hot aluminum: further price ahead—and perhaps so both industries are deter prove profitability for the goals. Like the baseball objectives are similar.

Domestic Steel In Year's Biggest

Domestic steel production week ended Sept. 18 too drop of the year, falling lower than in the preceding American Iron and Steel ported yesterday.

This means that the mills were using only 78 percent of their available capacity, with a usage factor of in the week ended Sept. 11.

The decline in weekly output the more significant all the more significant the week. One of the 11 trials—Cleveland—was an increase in weekly output in the Sept. 18 week. Its output by 4,000 tons to 147,000 ton.

As a result of last week's cumulative output by the industry reached 94,832,000 of 9.2 percent over the comp period. The production cap zation factor amounted to a down from 84.3 percent a Actual output for the indus Sept. 18, 1975 totaled 86, the capability utilization inc 79.8 percent.

Anticipating a rate cut by Citibank, the

with a quarter-point reduction last Thursday. However, no other major bank followed until yesterday.

The reduction by Morgan, the nation's

Chicago, the ninth largest, indicated that the lower rate would spread through the industry. Other banks may be encouraged by these cuts to announce their own reductions in anticipation of a cut by Cit-

Reflecting some of the same factors that have resulted in the downward pres-

Supporting the majority opinion were
Chief Judge David L. Bazelon and Circuit
Judge Robert Robb. The dissenter, Circuit Judge George E. Mackinnon, argued that the Congressional claim to the Ashland Oil information had been based on an invalid subpoena.

The Moss subcommittee has been attempting to investigate the possibility that some oil companies have underestimated the extent of their natural gas reserves in order to restrict the apparent national supply and keep prices high.

In 1975, the Trade Commission require 44 companies to file special reports about the extent of their natural gas leases and contracts within the United States. Comgress asked the F.T.C. for all the information, and Ashland went to court to keep its report secret.

Beame Opens a Series of Hearings On New Community-District Lines

By GLENN FOWLER

"I don't even want my garbage going to Queens," a resident of Roosevelt Island in the East River heatedly told Mayor Beame yesterday as the Mayor opened a series of public hearings on his proposals for new community-district lines under terms of the revised New York City Charter.

The Roosevelt Islander, Muriel Maida, and several of her neighbors in what is advertised as "Manhattan's newest community" are unhappy that Mr. Beame has zoned them into the new Community District A in Queens, the borough from which they get virtually all their municipal services but with which they feel little, if any, affinity.

Her comment drew a stiff retort from the city's Sanitation Commissioner, Anthony J. Vaccarello, who asked: "What would you like us to do with your garbage—take it on the aerial tramway?"

30 Witnesses Heard

Mrs. Maida was one of 30 witnesses at the first of five borough-by-borough hearings that the Mayor is holding this week and next before he recommends to the Board of Estimate new, uniform boundaries for the delivery of most city services, including police protection, sanitation, health, welfare, housing assistance, parks, sewers and highway maintenance. Excluded are fire protection, schools, transit and hospitals, which for varying reasons will continue on current district lines.

Most of yesterday's hearing was taken up with the Roosevelt Island dispute and with argument over the Mayor's plan to establish two special business districts, one in the lower Manhattan financial area and the other in the midtown shopping area. These would replace the current Community District 1 downtown and District 5 in midtown, both of which are to be dropped under the new alignment because they lack the minimum 100,000 population required by the revised Charter.

Under the Mayor's plans which would require a Charter amendment by the City Council, the special districts would be administered by boards having a voice in zoning and other land-use decisions. But delivery of services to the business areas would be controlled by adjoining community boards, which would expand into the territory now under jurisdiction of Boards 1 and 5. Spokesmen for those boards, along with representatives of business and real estate interests, strongly supported the superimposing of special districts in the two areas. Without such consideration, they said, business would be "swallowed up" by the predominantly residential concerns of community-board majorities.

"Employers in midtown pay 49 percent of all property taxes in Manhattan, they supply 40 percent of the jobs and they account for 50 percent of retail sales," William Stuhlberg, chairman of Board 5, told the hearing. "Are they to be denied input into the city's budget, its land use, its capital program?"

But Alan Lawrence, speaking for Board 6 in east midtown, which would become Board C under the new setup and would expand westward to the Avenue of the Americas, argued against the special district. Its businessman board, he said, would be empowered to make important zoning decisions while Board C "would be left to provide maid service" to the business area.

Downtown, the criticism was somewhat different. No one seemed to want to assume responsibility for servicing the sparsely populated financial district. "We'd just as soon give it all to the 'village board,'" said Richard Ropjak, chairman of the current Board 3 on the Lower East Side. "We have enough problems of our own."

Joan Swan, secretary of Board 2, was not so sure that the "village" wanted lower Manhattan, either. She said: "We're not renouncing anybody, but first we'd like to know where we're going to get money to hire some staff for the district service manager, so we can carry out our new duties under the Charter." Each board will have $30,000 in city funds in next year's budget, which is supposed to cover all its expenses, including the manager's salary.

Alleged Plot Organizer Released

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Sept. 20 (AP)—Robert White, alleged organizer of a plot to kill Senator Edward M. Kennedy, Democrat of Massachusetts, was released from jail today on personal recognizance. Judge George Bregian's decision came after the prosecutor, Eugene Mulcahy, requested a reduction of Mr. White's $25,000 bail. The case of Mr. White and his two alleged co-conspirators, David King and Sandra Rondeau, were continued to Sept. 30.

TV: Series on Pappy Boyington

'Baa Baa Black Sheep' About Marine Pilot Is on NBC

By JOHN J. O'CONNOR If this evening's "special two-hour premiere" can be taken as a reliable gauge, "Baa Baa Black Sheep" could turn out to be one of the most objectionable projects of the new season. Based loosely on the World War II exploits of Marine Corps Maj. Gregory (Pappy) Boyington, the series offers a glorification of drinking and brawling misfits.

Bloody fistfights and breaking of rules are the behavioral norms. And, with an unfailing instinct for the ratings jugular, NBC has seen fit to schedule the program for Tuesdays at 8, smack on the target of the so-called "family hour," which is supposed to keep gratuitous violence and sexual material to a minimum.

The techniques of "Baa Baa Black Sheep" are exceedingly devious even for prime-time TV. On one level, stuffed with newsreel clips and a narrator delivering historical data, the series asks to be taken seriously in its portrait of a real-life figure. On another, dribbling into tired comedy routines, it attempts to become a "light-hearted action series about the mis-adventures of Pappy Boyington and his squadron of "odd-ball but effective pilots." The mixture simply curdles.

Pappy, played in stereotypical virile monotonies by Robert Conrad, quits Gen. Claire L. Chennault's Flying Tigers ("These valiant Americans leave China...") and returns to the Marines and combat in the Pacific. Hustling, drinking, lying and otherwise being cute, he puts together a squadron of men who have been court-martialed for assorted offenses. General Moore (Simon Oakland) is dutifully impressed. Pappy: "With all due respect, sir. The general: "Don't kid me. You haven't got any respect. That's the one thing I like about ya."

The villain of the piece, the butt of jokes and hostility, is one Colonel Lard (Dana Elcar), who is portrayed as an almost psychotic fuddy-duddy as he attempts to keep Pappy and his boys within the rules that presumably apply to everyone else. But Pappy, with scarce scotch and available nurses, has won the allegiance of the general, who warns Boyington, "If you don't pile up a hell of a kill record in the next two weeks, you're all going to wind up back here in the stockade."

When the boys aren't bloodying one another's noses in fistfights that invariably seem to end with all participants knocked out, they are rushing off for dates with those nurses, who do a lot of squealing and giggling at the sight of "real" men. Their woman commander is an imposing butch type who belittles lines like, "Ya got that, girls?" Every once in a while, of course, the crew takes off to do battle with the Japanese, providing brief reminders that there was a serious purpose to World War II. The air battles obviously constitute a damn-the-expense item in the series budget. The enemy is heard speaking Japanese, while subtitles disclose the crucial translations: "They've tricked us, all right. Now we teach them a lesson." Perhaps the entire project should have been done in Japanese—with no subtitles.

Notes from TV land: The plugola bombardment, taking the form of a network using the stars of one program as guests on many of its other programs, reaches numbing proportions this week. The "special appearances" on the comedy/variety shows are bad enough, with performers dragged on for brief routines and the inevitable mention of their shows.

But the practice now has reinfected NBC News's "Today" show, which eased up on such shenanigans in recent years. Yesterday morning, Dick Van Dyke was seen in a pointless interview recorded last week, and several more NBC stars are on tap for in-house advertising. This is the same program that recently announced, with pride, that its anchorman would no longer have to deliver commercials. Only indirectly, it seems.

In last night's production of "La Traviata" on public television, Beverly Sills prefaced her performance with a short history of the opera. Among other things, she said that "Traviata" had its premiere in 1852 and that it was not successful at first.

In fact, the premiere took place in March 1853, and contemporary writers are seriously questioning the story of its initial failure. That "myth" is being traced to certain comments by Verdi himself, who tended toward pessimism and who was not beyond playing subtle musical politics with his leading singers.

One critic who attended the opening night in Venice recorded that a cheering audience brought on the composer several times for curtain calls. Miss Sills deserves more careful researchers.

ALTITUDE ERROR BY PILOT IS SEEN IN TURKISH CRASH

ISPARTA, Turkey, Sept. 20 (UPI)—The pilot of an airliner that flew low over this village in southern Turkey and crashed into a mountainside, killing all 155 persons aboard, apparently thought he was flying at 13,000 feet, reports from the scene indicated today.

A Turkish minister said the pilot also believed he was within a minute of his destination when he was more than 10 minutes away. Officials searching the wreck of the Turkish Airlines Boeing 727 on a 7,220-foot mountain said that they had located the plane's flight recorder, which might clarify the discrepancies.

The jet, on the last leg of a flight from Milan, Rome and Istanbul to Antalya, Turkey, struck the mountain last night eight miles south of Isparta and 51 miles short of its destination. The victims included a Turkish crew of eight, 23 Turkish passengers and about 80 Italians. Most of the rest were German and Dutch.

Nahit Mentese, the Turkish Minister of Communications, said: "The pilot asked for permission to descend to 12,000 feet from 13,000 feet and told the Antalya control tower he expected to touch down within a minute. Nothing else was heard from the plane after that message."

A witness here in Isparta said the airliner was "flying dangerously low, almost at rooftop level."

5 South African Blacks Wounded By Police After Stone-Throwing

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP)—The police wounded five blacks who threw stones at police fighting a bush fire near Johannesburg, a police spokesman announced today.

It was the only reported instance of racial violence yesterday. All was reported quiet today in the black suburb of Soweto, southwest of Johannesburg, where rioting first broke out in June, and in Cape Town, where there has been almost daily rioting this month.

AN ADVERTISEMENT THAT TRIES TO BENEFIT YOU AS WELL AS US

1st and 2nd Quarter Option.

You have the option to buy what you want to start your 1977 advertising ... as much or as little and for either quarter ... and not have to commit many months before you use what you buy.

Immediately below, do we describe what you want to start your 1977 advertising? And do we offer a viable option for buying what you want?

Want: Millions of homes.

Option: The Digest guarantees the kind of household coverage television promises. Over 18 million families buy it.

Want: National reach...covering all markets simultaneously and in depth.

Option: This map shows what we guarantee: 25% or more penetration of nearly all markets.

Or maybe you want regional flexibility. We offer that option, too, as this map shows: Regions of the country... top ten major markets... and (not shown) 50 test markets.

Want: Reasonable, and equally important, assured rates without a restricting long-term commitment.

Option: We assure you now — for the 1st and 2nd quarters of 1977 — an open rate of $3.73 per thousand households. Guaranteed. A low color rate that goes even lower with easy-to-earn disc.

Want: A buyer's market...in which you buy exactly what you want, and as much or as little... to appear exactly what you need it.

*All national advertising in The Digest appears adjacent to editorial. Our editors hold readers in front of your message.

To high-powered spectaculars like this. And the nature of our inventory makes it almost unlimited...with no sold-out quarters. Buy what you want. Run when you want to.

MULTI-PAGE SPECIALS

If the above describes your basic "wants", your option is Reader's Digest.

THESE UNIQUE VALUES COME WITH THE OPTION

Believability: The Digest has earned a unique level of trust. Commonly, say with conviction, "I read it in Reader's Digest" — speaking of both and advertisements.

Involvement: Have you ever heard anyone say, "That's a great story, you to send it to CBS"? But you will hear people say, "You ought to send it to Reader's Digest." This involvement spurs responsiveness.

Environment: Everything around your advertising in The Digest puts in a mood to feel good about you.

AND, OF COURSE, THE OPTION SELLS PRODUCT.
Example: One of the biggest, smartest, most successful of the new super-center retailers — the kind that ordinarily use a lot of TV and news — tried a spread in Reader's Digest. They won't reveal what happened they've ordered much more space.

Digest salesmen (who value and serve clients) will gladly tell you more about this option. They will tell you of merchandising support, field support, the kind of help some advertisers have forgotten that a medium can provide.
